

THE EARLY VACATIONISTS

THE early vacations will no doubt be spent by the sea, probably at a more or less fashionable resort, where an opportunity is afforded to exhibit one's prettiest clothes. A soft white summer silk, plentifully sprinkled with big green roses, has been used for the three ruffles composing the skirt of the first costume.

The scalloped edge of each ruffle is bound with the green taffeta which is used for the short fancy jacket. The green hemp hat worn with it has for a brim a double thickness of chiffon bound with black velvet, between which is laid a wreath of small roses.

The second frock has for its foundation a simple slip of plain and embroidered white batiste. Over this is worn a sleeveless coat of corn-colored linen bound with striped silk in brilliant green and orange, laced in the front with orange ribbons ending in tassels. The bright orange-and-black parasol adds a pleasing color note to the tout ensemble.

Earlier in the season the popularity of the Norfolk jacket developed in crepe de chine was demonstrated at Palm Beach. The summer girl will undoubtedly want one in her wardrobe. Worn with a tailored white linen skirt, a sheer waist with high standing collar, a roll-back cuff in striped blue and white, white and black buckskin sport shoes and a white sailor hat with blue and black band, a Belgium blue jacket of this description is decidedly chic.

Summer Rugs, Important!

Summer Rugs are no longer a fad or fancy, they are a necessity.

Today almost every one who cares for a clean, cool, sanitary home in summer changes the floor coverings. If not all through the house, then in the rooms most used—bedroom, living room, dining room.

Ready here, right now, is a wonderful variety of yarns, fiber and grass rugs. No matter what the scheme of furnishing may be, we have summer rugs in this showing to harmonize with it.

Rag Rugs

Rag Rugs remain the most popular of all summer rugs, because of their great beauty, durability and adaptability. We have a variety of weaves, from the old-fashioned "hit-and-miss" pattern to the elaborate poster and floral borders, and there is a wide range of prices.

Among the Grass Rugs

CREX RUGS are head and shoulders above all other grass rugs in public favor. This season brings new weaves, so that you may now have CREX Rugs, with plain or figured borders, in the regular weave, or in the herringbone weave.

It will be worth while to see the showing Monday and investigate prices.

22 VOTES PLEDGED FOR IMPEACHMENT DECLARES KELLEY

Councilmen Ready to Strike at Woodward Because of His Refusal to Preside
Over Election on Monday Afternoon.

CONFERENCE IS HELD BY FRIENDS OF MAYOR

Jim Key Taking Part in Fight—Members of Council
Already Discussing
Who Will Succeed Woodward.

Mayor James G. Woodward's finish at the hands of the majority faction of the council was pretty predicted Saturday by leaders who are planning impeachment proceedings against him following his refusal to preside at the election of a purchasing agent last week.

Impetus to the movement to impeach the mayor and thereby displace him was given when it was announced by Alderman C. H. Kelley, one of the leaders, that twenty-two members of general council had pledged to support the move. Only twenty votes are required.

The mayor was plainly agitated Saturday for the first time since talk of impeachment began ten days ago. He had refused to take the matter seriously until the secret caucus held Friday night in the office of Alderman Albert Thomson disclosed the fact that the required number of votes had been secured to proceed against him.

Mayor Calls Conference.
He called some of his friends into private conference and they appeared to him to accept the situation as grave. He assured them that he realized that the majority faction was determined to remove him and intimated that he would fight fire with fire.

At noon he sent for City Attorney James L. Mayson and discussed the action of the members leading the fight. Just what conclusions were reached is not known. In the afternoon he was placed on trial the city attorney would under the law act as prosecutor, representing the majority faction.

The mayor would also be allowed the privilege of legal council and it is said that he has already conferred with his attorneys relative to the affair.

That the fight on the mayor is not confined to members of general council was admitted by some of the leaders who said that many prominent business and professional men, working in various civic organizations and former members of council were coming forward to help to remove the mayor from office.

James L. Key, an avowed enemy of the mayor, who was re-elected last week as a member of the board of education, is serving as legal adviser to the majority faction of council. He was in the caucus Friday night and advised with many members directing them in the proper course.

Mayor Very Busy.
So busy was the mayor Saturday with some of his close friends in council that he had little time for reporters. At that time he was discussing the proposed impeachment.

The certainty with which the mayor's downfall is expected was emphasized when discussion of a successor to fill his unexpected vacancy was commenced. Mayor Pro Tem T. N. Ragdale would serve for thirty days until the date of impeachment, and during that period the charter has it that an election shall be called and a mayor shall be elected.

Alderman Jesse W. Armistead, former staunch supporter of the mayor, is now one of the most ardent advocates of impeachment, is considered one of the strongest possibilities, while Councilman Edwin Johnson, of the sixth ward, and one of the few known supporters of the mayor, is being known to be contemplating the race in the event of impeachment.

Charles W. Smith and Councilman O. H. Hall. Some members of the majority faction stated that they were planning to withdraw their opposition to the removal of the mayor and to support the election of a purchasing agent.

Means More Bickering.
Objections to this course were pointed out by other councilmen who considered it would mean one round after another of bickering and dissensions and ultimately to the best interests of the city.

This outbreak of the past few days is taken to indicate the re-election of the mayor. The mayor and some of his friends have made it known that they are not prepared to fight against Cummings and it was said that since the mayor's removal, the election appears certain.

The recent vote of the majority faction of general council to impeach the mayor recalls a similar fight ten years ago, which was finally won by the mayor. At that time the mayor was James L. Mayson, now attorney, but at that time he was mayor of council, and also mayor pro tem. He is believed to be removed from office the mayor will muster his forces and wage an active campaign for re-election.

SILENT TRIBUTE PAID TO MEMORY OF HOPKINS
Newport News, Va., May 22.—When the New York and Norfolk steamship Marina left the ways at the Newport News yard today, after a 30-day stay, the crew and officers broke the stillness of the wharves by playing the Star-Spangled Banner as the ship took to the water. The ship was the property of the yard, and the whistles failed to sound as the ship took to the water. Miss Almedia Bailey, daughter of the chief engineer of the yard, christened the freighter which will ply in the coastwise and south American trade.

LEO FRANK JUDGERS
TOWARD MEETING
TO DISCUSS CASE

Will Hold Conference Before They Decide Whether to Ask Prison Commission to Commute the Sentence.

HOWARD WILL CONDUCT
HEARING FOR PRISONER

"If Case Comes Before Me
I Shall Consider It From Georgia Basis," Declares
Governor-Elect Harris.

There were three important developments yesterday in the case of Leo M. Frank, whose petition for a commutation of sentence from death to life imprisonment will be heard by the prison commission, beginning May 31.

First, it was learned that an effort will soon be made to hold a conference of the jurors in the case to learn how they stand on the proposition to set aside the prison board to commute the sentence.

Second, announcement came from Augusta that former Congressman William Howard has been selected by the board to represent the case before the board and later before the governor.

Third, Governor-elect Nat Harris gave out a statement in Macon Saturday that he would consider the case before him, but would consider it from a Georgia basis, and act with the best interests of Georgia, and not the outside world, in his mind.

JURORS CONFERENCE.
An attempt has already been made to hold the Frank jurors together to determine the sentiment of the body, and to ascertain whether or not it would be advisable to present a petition to the prison board pleading for mercy in Frank's behalf.

This meeting was planned for last Sunday, when Fred Winburn, foreman of the jury, would have been expected to meet at his home Saturday afternoon for the purpose of discussing the Frank case. Only three jurors besides the foreman, however, put in their appearance.

They were J. E. Osborn, Fred Smith and T. J. Jeffries. They waited at the home of Mr. Winburn for all day Sunday, but during which, they state, but little was said of the Frank case, except that each juror had been surprised in respect to aiding the appeal for commutation, and that it seemed advisable to hold a conference first.

When it was seen that no others of the jury would appear, Fred Winburn informed the three jurors that he would make a second attempt to call another meeting upon his return to Atlanta, since he had to leave the city on a business trip.

STAND OF HARRIS.
Macon, Ga., May 22.—Governor-elect Nat E. Harris today, after seeing through a pile of letters from many sympathizers in various parts of the state, and from various sources, to the next morning for the murder of Mary Phagan, factory girl, made this statement:

"You can just say for Nat Harris that if the matter of dealing executive clemency to the condemned man is to be decided by the people, that case should not be taken into consideration outside world will not be taken into consideration one bit. It is entirely a Georgia matter, and if I am to consider the case I shall consider it altogether from a Georgia basis, with the interests of Georgia and the interests of Georgia people at heart."

This statement followed receipt of letters from various sources, as many as a thousand persons, Mr. Harris estimated, have written him imploring him that in the event the matter comes before him to commute Frank's sentence.

HOWARD WILL PRESENT CASE.
Augusta, Ga., May 22.—(Special.)—The final effort to save the life of Leo M. Frank, who is charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, factory girl, is being made by the Georgia state prison commission.

Mr. Howard, of Augusta, former congressman, who has been selected by the board to represent the case before the board and later before the governor, will conduct the hearing for the prisoner.

Dr. John E. White

Chattanooga, Tenn., May 22.—The Dixie highway from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, was given definite form here today when the commissioners, two each appointed by the governors of seven states, adopted the route of the highway after a three day's session. Chicago was selected as the northern terminus and Miami as the southern.

The commission designated a west and an east route on various rival links of thoroughfare between Indianapolis and Miami, but a plan was adopted late today looking toward connecting the north portion of the two lines with a road along the eastern and western shores of Lake Michigan and connecting the south portion with a road from Miami, along the west coast of Florida, thus making a continuing loop of the highway. This scheme was suggested by Commissioner Carl G. Fisher, of Indianapolis, who proposed extending the road from Chicago to South Bend, Ind., thence north to Mackinac, thence south via Bay City to Detroit.

Michigan to Join.
In adopting the plan the commission voted to invite Michigan into the association to extend the road through Toledo to Detroit. The commissioners also were authorized to investigate extensions of the road from Miami up the west coast joining the highway between Tallahassee and Jacksonville.

Among the principal cities on the west route between Chicago and Chattanooga are Danville, Ill.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Nashville, Tenn.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Cincinnati, Lexington, Ky., and Knoxville, Tenn.

Before adoption of the executive session tonight the Dixie Highway association adopted a charter, perfected a permanent organization of twenty-one directors, comprising the state highway commissioners and the seven original incorporators, and adopted plans for constructing the highway. A resolution was adopted providing that the various links in the road must be complete within a year from today, and it was proposed that the highway be dedicated next November, probably on Thanksgiving day. A resolution was adopted notifying each county and municipality through which the highway has been designated, that their links must be completely and satisfactorily constructed in accordance with the association's specifications within a year from today. The association reserved the right to change location of any part of the highway if the county or city fails to meet requirements.

To Encourage Branch Roads.
Another resolution presented by Commissioner George W. Harris, of Cincinnati, recommended to the directors that construction of branch roads connecting the main highway be encouraged. It also recommended that each state not now represented, but which builds acceptable lateral roads be permitted to name two directors in the association.

Clark Howell, chairman, presented the report of the committee on permanent organization.

MRS. W. S. ELKIN, JR. DIES OF PISTOL SHOT

Wife of Wellknown Druggist
Was Accidentally Wounded
at Her Residence.

Mrs. W. S. Elkin, Jr., wife of W. S. Elkin, Jr., president of the Elkin Drug company, was mortally wounded last night when she was shot by a revolver at her home, 307 Ponce de Leon avenue.

The pistol was discharged when Mrs. Elkin accidentally knocked it off the mantel. The bullet took effect in her abdomen.

When found by members of the family she was in an unconscious condition. Rushed to a private hospital she died before reaching the operating table and without regaining consciousness.

Before her marriage, Mrs. Elkin was Miss Baldwin, and was a popular in Atlanta and had a wide circle of friends, who will learn with regret of her death. The Elkins had been married about ten years.

HIGH VAULT OPENED, BUT NOT YET FOUND

Although it contained documents valued at more than half a million, the private vault of Emmett Hight, Miss Baldwin's brother-in-law, did not reveal a will when opened Saturday at noon before a group of witnesses.

Currency and silver reaching $500 was found with a bulk of deeds and other documents representing at least $500,000 in land, securities and bonds. Much of the property is in south Georgia farming land. Much jewelry was also found, but no will has yet been presented, and it has been practically agreed by both sides that no such document is in existence.

CLASHES REPORTED BETWEEN ITALIANS AND THE AUSTRIANS AT FRONTIER POINTS

State of War Already Exists, Although No Formal Declaration Has Yet Been Made by the Italian Government.

GENERAL MOBILIZATION
OF LAND AND SEA FORCES
NOW UNDER WAY IN ITALY

Paris Reports That All Communication With Italy Was Cut Last Midnight—Austrian Barracks Blown Up at Town in the Tyrol and Italian Residents Are Accused.

Paris, May 23.—(12:30 a. m.)—The Havas agency announces that all communication with Italy was cut at midnight.

London, May 23.—All Italy awaits the call to arms. The ministry has by its fact for war, and the general mobilization of the army and navy by order of the king now is under way.

The ministers of war and marine, according to a Rome dispatch, have declared a state of war in the provinces along the Austrian frontier and the islands and communes on the Adriatic. While this is not a declaration of war, it is the customary precautionary action taken in a grave crisis, when the next step may carry the country into hostilities.

Thousands of Austrian troops are facing Italian soldiers along the frontier. There have been clashes on the borders. The barracks of an Austrian regiment at Rovereto, in Tyrol, has been blown up. Many Italian residents in Austrian territory are being sent into Italy.

UNITED STATES
ACTS FOR AUSTRIA.
The Italian consul has been ordered by his government to leave Munich. Austria has asked the United States to take over the charge of Austrian consuls in Italy. It is understood that Switzerland will care for the Germans.

So far as is known neither the German nor Austrian minister at Rome or the Italian minister at Berlin has left his post, but preparations for a speedy departure have been completed.

Rumors that Italy had accepted has received assurances from Bulgaria that if Rumania decides to join the allies and help Russia by an invasion of Transylvania, Bulgaria will not attack her, and that, in fact, Bulgaria herself is considering the possibility of taking similar action, although her attack would be directed against Turkey. Greece is also interested in the developments and her efforts if she should decide to join the allies would mean action in the Dardanelles and Asia Minor.

STATE OF WAR IS DECLARED.
Rome, May 23.—(Via Paris, May 23, 12:30 a. m.)—General mobilization will begin Sunday. The ministers of war and marine have proclaimed a state of war in the Italian provinces bordering on Austria, in the islands and cities along the Adriatic coast as well as the fortresses which will be declared in a state of defense.

The proclamation of a state of war is declared in the provinces of Sondrio, Brescia, Verona, Vicenza, Belluno, Udine, Trieste, Treviso, Padova, Mantua and Ferrara and the islands and communes on the Adriatic coast, as well as the fortresses which will be declared in a state of defense.

Quitman Prepares to Feed Twenty Thousand People

Brooks County and Quitman Facing a Herculean Task on May 25—Five Bands to Be in Parade.

Quitman, Ga., May 22.—(Special).—With seventeen leading southern railroads issuing their lowest excursion rates—at about one fare for the round trip, good for a week—and with the city of Brooks county special excursion trains to Quitman, railroad officials have notified the executive committee of the Brooks County Industrial club that they estimate the attendance at the second annual annual industry convention at about 20,000 people and advise Quitman prepared to be prepared to feed at their big free dinner about 25,000 if they wish to be on the safe side.

The Georgia Chamber of Commerce has also notified the industrial club today that their tour out of Atlanta and north Georgia of automobiles will be five miles in length and will have in the tour from one hundred to two hundred cars by the time it reaches Quitman. In addition to this, from information received from other towns it is predicted that from 500 to 1,000 automobiles will be in the city on that day.

Towns Declare Holiday.

As evidence of the interest being manifested locally in the big day at Quitman, the towns in the immediate territory are all declaring local holidays in order that the citizenship may attend en masse. The following cities have already issued such proclamations: Thomasville, Boston, Moultrie, Barwick, Pava, Nashville, Adel, with nearly a dozen other towns passing petitions now asking the mayor and council to declare May 23 a local holiday. In Yalobusha, Judge W. H. Thomas has adjourned his court. Never in the history of south Georgia and Florida and seldom in the history of the south has such intense interest centered on one single event.

To Be 500 Floats.

It is estimated that there will be 500 floats and stock in the parade and at least 1,000 decorated automobiles. It is believed that the length of the parade will be so great that it will require fully two hours for it to pass the reviewing stand in the center of the city.

It is estimated that there will be farm floats the like of which no county in the south can produce. These floats will be marvels of diversified agriculture, and will show to what an extent diversified farming has been developed in Brooks county and south Georgia. Some of the district floats will be of large proportions, and will contain on the single float practically every known product of a south Georgia farm.

The parade will be headed by the farm floats of the farmers of Brooks county, and in view of the fact that the parade this year of farm floats will be much ahead of last year, the visitors to the parade will be able to see with wonder, it is safe to predict that the first float section of the parade this year will cause state-wide comment.

Live Stock in Parade.

Following close behind the farmers' float in Brooks county will come farm floats and general floats from various parts of south Georgia and north Georgia, the visitors to the parade will be able to see with wonder, it is safe to predict that the first float section of the parade this year will cause state-wide comment.

After the farm floats will come the display of walking live stock, and it is estimated that there will not be less than two hundred head of cattle, besides scores of cattle, horses and other live stock, all of which will have either been raised in Brooks county or in south Georgia, and will represent the high-grade class of stock used by the farmers of Brooks county.

Not the least attractive feature of the parade will be the commercial floats headed by those built by the merchants of Quitman. The Interstate Lumber company will have three in the parade, and the Woman's Temperance union will also have three floats in the parade.

Among the list of outside commercial floats will be one from the Moultrie Packing house, a splendid business enterprise of southwest Georgia, which has been put on the feet by the people of Moultrie at an expense of nearly a quarter of a million dollars, and which has added a great deal of stimulus to the animal industry in this section and is a monument to the progressive spirit of the people of Moultrie.

Bands in Parade.

In the parade will be several bands all of the Quitman fire apparatus, which is the most modern of any town in south Georgia, the Quitman Rifles, which is the pride of Brooks county, and is one of the banner companies of the state militia, and the Quitman Rifles, which is the pride of Brooks county, and is one of the banner companies of the state militia, and the Quitman Rifles, which is the pride of Brooks county, and is one of the banner companies of the state militia.

A grand fire engine, which will come the decorated automobiles, which will come from all parts of south Georgia, and the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, to take part in Quitman's big day. Following this will come the hundreds of automobiles from the city of Thomasville and Columbia, and hundreds of automobiles from various cities of south Georgia and north Florida. It is conservatively estimated that there will be at least one thousand automobiles in the parade.

Immediately at the close of the parade, President Charles J. Haden, of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce, who is reviewing stand, declare the big convention and the big show to be on in his honor. He will introduce to the audience Honorable Stanley Bennett, who will deliver an address of welcome, which will be responded to by one of the prominent people who will be present, among them being Honorable John M. Haden, governor of Georgia, Honorable Carter Harrison, mayor of Chicago, Honorable C. G. Matheson, the president of the Georgia

Sure Way to Get Rid Of Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid ammonia; apply it at night when retiring, use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it gently with the finger tips. By morning, most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have. You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid ammonia at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.—(adv.)

School of Technology; Honorable J. D. Price, Georgia commissioner of agriculture; Honorable Charles S. Barrett, president of the Farmers' union; Dr. A. M. South, president of the Georgia College of Agriculture, and many others too numerous to name.

Features of Convention.

During the progress of the great parade and against the scenic film company, of New York city, which has contracted for at least a hundred pictures, taking in every section of the parade. This picture house is contracted for at least a hundred pictures, taking in every section of the parade. This picture house is contracted for at least a hundred pictures, taking in every section of the parade.

It will be seen, therefore, that this picture, which will be used all over the country, will be one of the most notable achievements of the day. It is one of the most notable achievements of the day. TENTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Sanford Quest, master criminologist of the world, finds that in bringing to justice Macdonald, the murderer of Lord Ashleigh's daughter, he has but just begun a life-and-death struggle with a mysterious master criminal. In a hidden hut in Professor Ashleigh's garden, he has seen an evil, morbid ape skeleton and a living inhuman creature, half monkey, half man, destroyed by fire. In his rooms have appeared from nowhere black, roving, continuing, sinister, threatening, noise, signed by a pair of armless hands. Laura and Lenora, his assistants, suspect Craig, the professor's nephew, of a double murder. The black boxes continue to appear in uncanny fashion. Craig is trapped by Quest, but escapes to England, where Quest, Lenora and the professor follow him. Lord Ashleigh is murdered by the Hands. Lenora is abducted in London and rescued. Craig is captured and escapes to Port Said.

THE SHIP OF HORROR

CHAPTER XXII.

Quest leaned a little forward and gazed down the line of the steamer. The professor, in a borrowed overcoat and cap, was reclining at full length, studying a book on seagulls which he had found in the library. Laura and Lenora were both doing tranquilly. Mr. Harris of Scotland Yard was deep in a volume of detective stories.

"As a pleasure cruise," Quest remarked grimly, "this little excursion seems to be a complete success."

Laura opened her eyes at once.

"Trying to get my coat again, eh?" she retorted. "I suppose that's what you're after. Going to tell me, I suppose, that it wasn't Craig I saw board this steamer?"

"We are all liable to make mistakes," Quest observed, "and I am inclined to believe that this is one of yours."

Laura's expression was a little dogged.

"It's not too late for that, Mr. Harris," she said. "I can't help that. I only know that he came on board. My eyes are the one thing in life I do believe."

"If you'll excuse my saying so, Miss Laura," Harris ventured, leaning deferentially towards her, "there isn't a passenger on board this ship, or a servant, or one of the crew, whom we haven't seen."

"We've been into every stateroom, and we've even searched the hold. We've been over the ship, backwards and forwards. The captain's own stateroom has been our guide, and we've conducted an extra search on our own account. Personally, I must say I have come to the same conclusion as Mr. Quest. At the present moment there is no such person as the man we are looking for on board this steamer."

"Then he either changed on to another one," Laura declared, obstinately, "or else he jumped overboard."

Quest struggled to his feet and threw back the rug in his chair.

"Come on, Harris, you and I promised to report to the captain this morning. I don't suppose he'll be any too pleased with us. Let's get through with it."

The two men walked down the deck together.

"No luck, sir," Quest announced. "Your steward has given us every assistance possible and we have searched the ship thoroughly. Unless he has found a hiding place unknown to your steward, and not apparent to us, the man is not on board."

The captain frowned slightly.

"You are not suggesting that that is possible, I suppose?"

Quest did not at once reply. He was thinking of Laura's obtuseness.

"Personally," he admitted, "I should not have believed it possible. The young lady of our party, however, who declares that she saw Craig board the steamer, is quite immovable."

"Brown," said the captain, turning to the steward, "I understand you to say that you have taken these gentlemen into every corner of the ship, that you have ransacked every possible hiding place, that you have given them every possible opportunity of searching for themselves?"

"That is quite true, sir," the man acknowledged.

"You agree with me that it is impossible for anyone to have hidden in this ship?"

"Absolutely, sir."

"You hear, gentlemen?" the captain continued. "I really can do no more. What the mischief are you hanging about for, Brown?" he asked, turning to the steward, who was standing by with a carpet-sweeper in his hand.

"Room wants cleaning out badly, sir."

The captain glanced distastefully at the carpet-sweeper.

The professor came ambling along towards the table.

"I fear that I am a few moments late," he remarked, as he took the chair next to Mrs. Foster Rowe. I offer you my apologies, captain. I am very hungry."

"Well, you'll have to stay hungry a long time at this table then," Mrs. Foster Rowe snapped. "Seems to me that the service is going to be abominable."

The steward, who had just arrived, presented a cup of bouillon to Quest. The others had all been served. Quest stirred it thoughtfully.

"And as to the custom," Mrs. Foster Rowe continued, "of serving gentlemen before ladies, it is, I suppose, peculiar to this steamer."

Quest hastily laid down his spoon, raised the cup of bouillon and presented it with a little bow to his neighbor.

"Pray allow me, madam," he begged. "The steward was to blame."

"Mrs. Foster Rowe did not hesitate for a moment. She broke up some toast in the bouillon and commenced to sip it."

The spoon suddenly went clattering from her fingers. She caught at the sides of the table, there was a strange look in her face. With scarcely a murmur she fell back in her seat.

There was a slight commotion. The doctor came hurrying up from the other side of the saloon. He bent over her and his face grew grave.

"She had better be carried out," he whispered. "Was it a faint?" Lenora asked.

"We shall know directly," the captain replied. "Better keep your places, I think. Steward, serve the dinner as usual."

The man held out his hand to withdraw the cup of bouillon, but Quest drew it towards him.

"It's not for me," he said. "The doctor said that it was for a moment." He ordered.

have found our way, are one of the strangest and fiercest of the nomad tribes. They are descended, without a doubt, from the ancient Mongolians, who invaded this country some seven hundred years before Christ, but have preserved in a marvelous way their individuality as a race. They have the narrow eyes and the thick nose base of the pure Oriental; also much of his cunning. One of their special weaknesses seems to be the invention of the most hideous forms of torture, which they apply remorselessly to their enemies."

WEDNESDAY—This has been a wonderful day for us, chiefly owing to what I must place on record as an act of great bravery by Craig, my servant. Early this morning, a man-eating lion found his way into the enclosure. The Mongols behaved like errand cowards. They fled right and left, leaving the chief's little daughter, Feenda, at the brute's mercy. Craig, who is by no means an adept in the use of firearms, chased the animal as he was making off with the child, and, more by good luck than anything else, managed to wound it mortally. He brought the child back to the campment just as the chief and the warriors of the tribe returned from a hunting expedition. Our position here is now absolutely secure. We are treated like gods, and, appreciating my weakness for all matters of science, the chief has today explained to me many of the secret mysteries of the tribe. Amongst other things, he has shown me a wonderful secret poison, known only to this tribe, which he called Vedemsool. It brings almost instant death, and is exceedingly difficult to trace. The addition of sugar causes a curious condensation and resolves it almost to a white paste. The only antidote is substance which they use as food, and which is exactly equivalent to our camphor.

The professor closed his book. Quest promptly rang the bell.

"Some sugar," he ordered, turning to the steward.

They waited in absolute silence. The suggestion which the professor's disclosure had brought to them was stupefying; even Quest's fingers, as a moment or two later he rubbed two knobs of sugar together so that the contents should fall into the tubes of bouillon, shook. The result was magical. The bouillon turned to a strange shade of gray and began slowly to thicken.

"It is Mongol poison!" the professor cried, with breaking voice.

They all looked at one another.

"Craig must be here amongst us," Quest muttered.

Lenora grasped the rails of the steamer and glanced downwards at the great barge full of Arab sailors and merchandise. In the near background were the docks of Port Said. It was their first glimpse of eastern atmosphere and color.

"I can't tell you how happy I am," she declared to Quest, "to think that this voyage is over. Every night I have gone to bed terrified."

He smiled grimly.

"Coming on shore, any of you?" Harris inquired.

"We may when the boat moves up," Quest replied. "The professor went off on the first barge. Here he is, coming back."

A little boat had shot out from the docks, manned by a couple of Arabs. They could see the professor seated in the stern. He was poring over a small document which he held in his hand. He waved to them excitedly.

"He's got news!" Quest muttered.

He strode straight to Quest and Lenora and gripped the former by the arm.

"Look!" he cried. "Look!"

He held out a card. Quest read it aloud:

There is not one amongst you with the wit of a Mongar villain. And I am afraid!

The Hands!

"Where did you get it?" Quest demanded.

"That's the point—the whole point!" the professor exclaimed excitedly. "He's done us! He's landed! That paper was pushed into my hand by a tall Arab, who mumbled something and hurried off across the docks. On the landing stage, mind!"

The captain came and put his head out of the door.

"Mr. Quest," he said, "can you spare me a moment? You can't come, if you like."

Quest moved as he turned away. The captain closed the door of his cabin. He pointed to a carpet-sweeper which lay against the wall.

"Look at that," he insisted.

They lifted the top. Inside were several sandwiches and a small can of food.

"What on earth is this?" Quest demanded.

"But he was there—a second ago!" Laura cried out.

"I beg your pardon, miss," Brown ventured, "but the deck's closed at the end, and as you can see, with sailcloth, and I was leaning over the rail myself when you shrieked. There wasn't anyone else near me, and no one can possibly have passed round the deck, as you can see for yourself."

"Very well, then," she said, "you people had better get a strait-waistcoat ready for me. If I didn't see Craig there, I'm going off my head."

Quest had disappeared some seconds ago. He came thoughtfully back, a little later.

"Captain," he asked, "what shall you say if I tell you that I have proof that Craig is on board?"

The captain glanced at Laura and restrained himself.

"I should probably say a great many things which I should regret afterwards," he replied, grimly.

"Sit down and we'll tell you what has happened in my room," Quest continued.

He told the story, calmly and without remark. The captain held his head.

"The ship shall be searched," the captain declared, "once more. We'll look into every crack and every cupboard."

Lenora turned away with a little shiver. It was one of her rare moments of weakness.

"You won't find him! You won't find him!" she murmured. "And I am afraid!"

Lenora grasped the rails of the steamer and glanced downwards at the great barge full of Arab sailors and merchandise. In the near background were the docks of Port Said. It was their first glimpse of eastern atmosphere and color.

"Mr. Quest," he said, "can you spare me a moment? You can't come, if you like."

Quest moved as he turned away. The captain closed the door of his cabin. He pointed to a carpet-sweeper which lay against the wall.

"Look at that," he insisted.

They lifted the top. Inside were several sandwiches and a small can of food.

"Professor," Quest asked, "how long would it take us to get to this Mongar village you spoke about?"

"Two or three days, if we can get camels," the other replied. "If you agree with me, then, as to Craig's probable destination?"

Quest nodded.

"What sort of fellows are they, anyway?" he asked. "Will it be safe for us to push on alone?"

"With me," the professor assured him, "you will be safe anywhere. I speak a little of their language. I have lived with them. They are far more civilized than some of the interior tribes."

They disembarked and were driven to the hotel, still discussing their project. The professor had disappeared for some time, but rejoined them later.

"It is all arranged," he announced. "I found a dragoman whom I knew. We shall have four of the best camels and a small escort ready to start tomorrow morning. Furthermore, I have news. An Englishman, whose description precisely tallies with Craig's, started off only an hour ago in the same direction. This time, at any rate, Craig cannot escape us."

They made their way back to the hotel, dined in the cool, bare room, and sauntered out again into the streets. The professor led the way to a little building, outside which a man was volubly inviting all to enter.

"You shall see one of the sights of Port Said," he promised. "This is a real Egyptian dancing girl."

A girl, who seemed to be dressed in little more than a winding veil, glided on to the stage, away and moving slowly to the rhythm of the monotonous music. She danced a measure which none of them except the professor had ever seen before, coming now and then so close that they could almost feel her hot breath, and Lenora felt somewhat vaguely disturbed by the glitter of her eyes.

Suddenly Laura leaned forward.

"Look at the professor," she whispered.

They all turned their heads. A queer change seemed to have come into the professor's face. His teeth were gleaming between his parted lips, his head was bowed forward, his little eyes were filled with a strange, hard light. He was a transformed being, unrecognizable, perturbing. Even while they watched, the girl floated close to where he sat and leaped towards him with a queer, mocking smile. His hand suddenly descended upon her foot. She laughed aloud more. There was a little exclamation from Lenora. The professor's whole frame quivered. He matched the anklet from the girl's anklet and bent forward. She leaped towards him, a torrent of words streaming from her lips. The professor answered her in her own language. She listened to him in amazement. The anger passed. She bent over him. The professor still argued. She shook her head. Finally he placed some gold in her palms. She patted him on the cheek, laughed into his eyes, pointed behind and resumed her dance. The anklet remained in the professor's hand.

"Say, we'll get out of this," Quest said. "The girls have had enough."

The professor made no objection.

"Congratulations!" he said. "You have been a collector of Egyptian gold ornaments all my life. This is the one anklet I needed to complete my collection. It has the double mark of the Pharaohs. I recognized it at once. There are a thousand like it, you would think, in the bazaars there. In reality there may be, perhaps, a dozen more in all Egypt which are genuine."

They all looked at one another. Their relief had grown too poignant for words.

"Early start tomorrow," Quest reminded them.

Lenora, a few nights later, looked down from the star-strewn sky which seemed suddenly to have dropped so much nearer to them, to the shadows thrown across the desert by the dancing flames of their fire.

"It is the same world, I suppose," she murmured.

Laura rose to her feet.

"Say, I'm going to get a drink," she announced. The dragoman who had been hovering around, bowed gravely and pointed towards the water bottles.

She took the born cup from the dragoman.

"Have some yourself, if you want to, Hassan," she invited.

Hassan bowed gravely, tilted a cup and drank it off. He stood for a moment perfectly still, as though something were coming over him which he failed to understand. Then his lips parted, his eyes for a moment seemed to shoot from out of his drowsy skin, he gripped her by his arms and fell over on his side. Laura, who had only slipped her cup, threw it from her. She too, reeled for a moment. The professor and Quest came running up, attracted by Hassan's shriek.

"They're poisoned!" she cried.

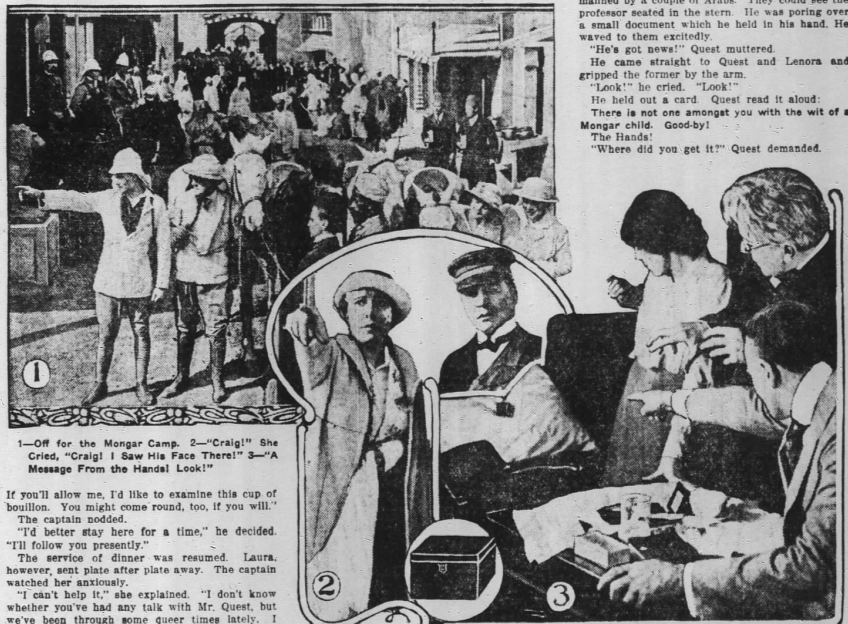

"The Vedemsool!" Quest shouted. "My God! Pull yourself together, Laura. Hold up for a minute."

He dashed back to their little encampment and reappeared almost immediately. He threw Laura's head back and forced some liquid down her throat.

"It's camphor," he cried. "You'll be all right, Laura. Hold on to yourself!"

He swung round to where the dragoman was lying, forced his mouth open, but it was too late.

"I am all right now," Laura declared. Quest felt her pulse and her forehead. They moved back to the tent.

1—Off for the Mongar Camp. 2—"Craig!" She Cried, "Craig! I Saw His Face There!" 3—"A Message From The Hands! Look!"

If you'll allow me, I'd like to examine this cup of bouillon. You might come round, too, if you will."

The captain nodded.

"I'd better stay here for a time," he decided.

"I'll follow you presently."

The service of dinner was resumed. Laura, however, sent plate after plate away. The captain watched her anxiously.

"I can't help it," she explained. "I don't know whether you've had any talk with Mr. Quest, but we've been through some queer times lately. I guess this death business is getting on my nerves."

The captain was startled.

"You don't for a moment connect Mrs. Foster Rowe's death with the criminal you are in search of?" he exclaimed.

Laura sat quite still for a moment.

"The bouillon was offered first to Mr. Quest," she murmured.

The captain called his steward.

"Where did you get the bouillon from you served that last cup, especially?" he asked.

"From the pantry just as usual, sir," the man answered. "It was all served out from the same cauldron."

"Any chance of anyone getting at it?"

"And the bouillon," Lenora cried, clasping Quest's arm, "the bouillon was meant for you!"

There seemed to be, somehow, amongst all of them, a curious disposition to discuss this matter. Suddenly Lenora, who was sitting on the lounge underneath the porthole, put out her hand and picked up a card which was lying by his side. She glanced at it, at first, curiously. Then she shrieked.

"A message!" she cried. "A message from The Hands! Look!"

They crowded around her. In that same familiar handwriting was scrawled across the face of the card these few words:

You have escaped this time by a chance of fortune, but because your wife is keen, not because of your own shrewdness; simply because Fate willed it. It will not be for long.

Underneath was the drawing of the clenched hands.

"There is no longer any doubt," Lenora said calmly. "Craig is on board. He must have been on deck a few minutes ago. It was his hand placed this card on the porthole."

"Listen! What's that?"

There was a scream from the deck. They all recognized Laura's voice. Harris was out of the room first, but they were all on deck within ten seconds.

"What is it, Laura?" Lenora cried.

She swung round upon them.

"Craig!" she cried. "Craig! I saw his face as I sat in my chair there, talking to the captain. I saw a man's white face—nothing else. He must have been leaning over the rail. He heard me call out and he disappeared."

"That's the point—the whole point!" the professor exclaimed excitedly. "He's done us! He's landed! That paper was pushed into my hand by a tall Arab, who mumbled something and hurried off across the docks. On the landing stage, mind!"

The captain came and put his head out of the door.

"Mr. Quest," he said, "can you spare me a moment? You can't come, if you like."

Quest moved as he turned away. The captain closed the door of his cabin. He pointed to a carpet-sweeper which lay against the wall.

"Look at that," he insisted.

They lifted the top. Inside were several sandwiches and a small can of food.

"What on earth is this?" Quest demanded.

"You see," he pointed out, "there's room there for a man to have hidden, especially if he could crawl out on deck at night. I couldn't make out why the chickens Brown was always sweeping on my room, and I took up this thing a little time ago and looked at it. This is what I found."

"Where's Brown?" Quest asked, quickly.

"I rang down for the chief steward," the captain continued, "and ordered Brown to be sent up at once. The chief steward came himself instead. It seems Brown went off without his wages, but with a huge parcel of bedding, on the first barge this morning, before anyone was about."

Quest groaned as he turned away.

"Captain," he declared, "I am ashamed. He has been here all the time and we've let him slip through our fingers. Girls!" he went on briskly, turning towards Laura, who had just come up, "India's off. We'll catch this barge, if there's time. Our luggage can be put on shore when the boat docks."

the first great Pan-American conference met in Washington in the winter of 1889-90, and was presided over by Honorable James G. Blaine, then secretary of state. The estimate which the governments of Central and South America have placed upon it is shown by the recognized prominence, ability and quality of the men whom they use, and the interests of the great northern republic could loan $500,000,000 during the next five years to Latin-American governments, states, municipalities and responsible private companies, they would be taking steps which would increase the commerce of the United States with those countries $500,000,000. have appointed delegates. If this conference is a success, it may mark the beginning of a splendid era in the commercial, financial, economic and political relations of the United States and the countries of the Americas from Mexico to Cuba south to Argentina and Chile. To be, however, a success, it must accomplish certain specific results which will enable the delegates to return to their respective countries with the mandate to settle the trouble they have taken in accepting the invitation of the United States.

United States and the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The most important opportunities under this head are:

- One for lines running between the Atlantic and gulf ports of the United States and the Atlantic ports of the eastern coast of South America proper, on the other hand; second, for lines between the gulf ports of the United States and those of the west coast of South America; and third, for lines between the Atlantic ports of the United States and those of the Caribbean and Atlantic ports of South America. The latter routes, of course, would be in the east.

Co-ordinate to these opportunities also are those of new lines from the Atlantic and gulf ports of the United States to the west coast of Central America and Mexico, and from the Pacific ports

The importance of this phase of bettering commercial relations is emphasized by the fact that the goods referred to department stores in a great city, where it is impossible to conceive that one store would depend upon the sales of another, are distributed by the latter to distribute the articles purchased by its customers. At the present time the United States and the countries of Latin-America are in a position to depend only upon the conveniences of Europe instead of their own, to carry back and forth what they buy and sell. That the Pan-American financial conference are thoroughly alive to this situation is proven by interviews and statements.

As a matter of record and correct information regarding the actual program of the conference, the delegates stated that the questions submitted by the secretary of the treasury for the consideration of the delegates, as official recommendations, were divided into the following heads: (1) Public finance; (2) The monetary situation; (3) The present banking situation; (4) The financial and monetary improvements; (5) The financing of private enterprises; (6) The extension of inter-American trade; (7) The improvement of the shipping and improved transportation facilities. Each of these in turn is subdivided into about four or five subordinated and important phases of the program are those which have been discussed in this article. The object of this kind of work has been impossible to touch upon more than a few "high places" connected with this great conference, but, if what I have said here awakens the interest of any reader in the financial, commercial and economic possibilities and opportunities of the Latin-American continent, and if it stimulates the friendship of the United States with them, the office of the Pan-American union in Washington, inspired by that phase of its work, will be glad to make some degree a central Pan-American or International bureau of information, and will be glad to answer all reasonable inquiries.

Dedication of Memorial Pillars.

An event of more than usual interest during the coming week will be the dedication exercises at the house for incurables, to be held at 5:30 p. m. Friday, May 28.

The beautiful spirit engendered by this act will be typified in the exercises which are to commemorate the work done by a former member of the board up to the time of her death, Mrs. Samuel Yoder Tupper.

The pillars just erected at the entrance are to serve as a memorial to her, and will be dedicated on this occasion, Bishop Nelson and Dr. Meminger officiating.

After the services, to which everybody is invited and cordially urged to be present, the institution and grounds will be open for inspection.

Atlanta Chapter, U. D. C.

The Atlanta chapter, daughters of the Confederacy, will hold its regular meeting Thursday in the Woman's club. Annual reports will be read by the officers and new officers will be elected. The executive board will meet at 2:30 o'clock in committee room.

The following chairmen are requested to be present with a written report: Scholarship, Mrs. W. C. Coleman; refreshments, Mrs. Robert O. Stevens; refreshments, Mrs. John Henderson; Wanda Davis Memorial, Mrs. James Jackson; year book, Mrs. Stevens; reception, Mrs. J. R. Moley; educational, Mrs. Frank Smith; home, Mrs. J. H. Holland; decoration, Mrs. W. F. Williams; medals, Mrs. John Henderson; with honors, Mrs. George Hope; soldiers' home, Mrs. A. O. Woodward; chapter house, Mrs. Helen H. Jones; book, Mrs. H. M. Jones; program, Mrs. W. S. Taylor; legislative, Mrs. J. H. Harrison; publicity, Mrs. Lottie Beite Wylie; crosses, Miss Sarah Lee Evans.

Closing Meeting of Woman's Club.

The closing meeting of the Atlanta Woman's club will be held Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the club house. Final reports will be given by the officers and the chairman of standing committees. The president, Mrs. P. McGovern, will give an interesting report, as the year has been one of unusually important one, and many important committees have been formed. Report from committees appointed on May 19 to look into the matter of securing representation for women on park playground, educational, and other boards, Mrs. Linton Hopkins chairman. Installation of new officers will also occur. All members are urged to be present, as matters of importance will be discussed.

After the business meeting, a social half hour will be devoted to the new members.

Concert at Wesley Memorial

A most enjoyable program has been arranged for the benefit of one of the young men's classes of Wesley Memorial Sunday school, to be given in the main auditorium of the church Friday evening, May 28. A chorus of young voices will sing some of the sweetest of old southern melodies, and, in addition, there will be several solos and readings. A most enjoyable evening is promised those who attend.

Piano Recital.

Pupils of the Atlanta Conservatory of Music from the piano class of Miss Clara Mae Smith, assisted by pupils from other departments, will give a recital next Friday afternoon in Cadillac hall at 4 o'clock. The public is cordially invited.

Composer of Popular Music

Vincent Kay, of New York, violinist and conductor, is here for a short visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William O. Kay. Mrs. Kay and her son are well-known musicians of Kansas City. Mr. Kay has just returned from Bermuda, where a war song to his musical setting is being sung, and has made a hit in New York and Atlanta, also as a soloist.

The Bermuda Royal Gazette has called it the "Bermuda Tipperary," and it is universally copyrighted to be sung over England and Canada in honor of the English volunteers of Bermuda.

Mr. Kay has a beautiful voice in manuscript which has made a marked success as an Atlanta orchestra played it at several functions during opera week.

Mrs. Willis Entertains.

Mrs. Lawrence Willis entertained at an informal dinner Tuesday in honor of her mother, Mrs. Bettie Yarbrough, at her home in East Point. Those invited were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. McKim, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Ashford, Misses Joe Boyd, Miss Fannie Harrison, and Mr. Willis.

For Miss Hudson.

Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Jerome Davidson entertained fifty of their young friends at an informal dancing party last evening at their home in West End for Miss Gertrude Hudson, of Americus.

Supper at Baptist Church.

The ladies of the House of Love Avenue Baptist church will give a supper on Thursday evening, May 27, at 6:30 o'clock. The friends and members of the congregation are cordially invited to be present. It will be for the benefit of the church, and tickets will be 50 cents.

Help the Stomach Digest Your Food

When the stomach fails to digest and distribute that which is eaten, the bowels become clogged with masses of waste and refuse that ferment and generate poisons that cause distress and often serious illness.

Most people naturally object to the drastic cathartic and purgative agents that shock the system. A mild, gentle laxative, however, is in effect and that which quickly relieves constipation in the California Spring Water, sold by druggists at fifty cents and one dollar a bottle. It does not grip or cramp but acts easily and pleasantly on the bowels for the most satisfactory results for children, women and elderly persons.

BRITAIN QUEERED BY UNITED STATES

As to Meaning of Statement Regarding American Attitude to Order in Council. Trade Conferences Suspended.

Washington, May 22.—The determination of the United States government not to recognize or be bound by the provisions of the British order in council which declared an embargo on all commercial intercourse between the United States and Germany, as well as inward or outward bound through neutral countries, was manifested in several ways today.

The foreign trade advisers of the state department announced that they had decided to suspend all conferences with British embassy officials here with reference to the informal arrangements which had been in progress not only to assist American export interests in obtaining payment for cargoes detained, but also to secure for American importers American owned goods now in Germany, continued before the order in council went into effect.

Better Understanding Wanted. Secretary Bryan said that he had been taken in order to secure a better understanding with the British government as to the meaning of the foreign trade advisers were acting. Ambassador Fager, at London, was acting. Secretary Bryan said that he had been taken in order to secure a better understanding with the British government as to the meaning of the foreign trade advisers were acting.

Differences of Practical Character. The decision of the trade advisers to suspend their conference with British embassy officials here was based on differences of a practical character as to the capacity in which the American owned goods from Germany which had been contracted for and some of which had been paid for before the order in council was issued. The text of the trade advisers' statement follows:

arisen in the informal and unofficial conference between the British embassy, the commercial adviser of the British embassy, and the trade advisers of the department of state, who have been in a personal capacity representing the United States government. Mr. Rose and Mr. Fleming have decided that they cannot continue their conferences until certain of the difficulties have been removed, and they have therefore, made a full report of what has taken place to the department of state and will await its action.

Treatment of American Goods. While the American trade advisers were reticent concerning differences of opinion between the British and American trade advisers, it is understood to relate to correspondence of the department of state, and the American trade advisers offering a plan for the treatment of the time limit for the ship goods ordered before March 1, was set at June 1, but the British government announced that period had been extended until June 15.

The effect on Cotton. The statement of the American trade advisers handed to the state department October 26 by the British ambassador, saying that the ambassador had been advised by Sir Edward Grey that cotton was and would remain on the free market. On that day, American growers contracted for sales of cotton in the United States for delivery in subsequent months.

Young John D. Disclaims Responsibility for Happenings in Colorado—Not Against the Labor Unions. Washington, May 22.—Concluding his examination by the Industrial Relations Commission, John D. Rockefeller Jr., entered denials to a charge which, if sustained, would, according to the Commissioner, have placed the door of the Colorado mine operators' responsibility for the unfortunate happenings in the Colorado coal strike. The charges were framed and supported by Commissioner Weinstock as being in brief the allegations brought against the operators by the strikers.

Rockefeller's Answer. Answering the first charge Mr. Rockefeller said: "The representatives of the unions, so far as I know, have not met in conference with the operators, and the striking miners, as I understand, were present at a meeting called by the representatives of the British government where they met three of the operators and the governor and discussed the situation."

quitted, then I think he is justified in resorting to violence." Try Lee Hester to Answer. When Mr. Rockefeller left the stand, Mr. Lee Hester, publicly agent for the Rockefeller interests, who followed him, declined to answer questions as to whether he wrote public statements appearing under Mr. Rockefeller's name. Mr. Rockefeller's public statements would take up later the question of compensating him.

SCIENCE AND NEAR-SCIENCE UP-TO-DATE

Why Man Has Always Had to Go A-Courting to Win His Bride

It Is Nature's Law That the Male Shall Seek Out and Win His Mate.

By DELIA AUSTRIAN.

MR. MAN, you must not shrug your shoulders with bland indifference and say: "I do not want to go a courting. I want to woo and win my sweetheart in haste. If I have to court her at all let me propose to her in a hurry by wire or by long-distance telephone."

Shucks, Mr. Man; you do not know the first thing about love and its psychology. You ought to know that when birds go courting they sing their most beautiful love songs and strut and stride to display their fine plumage. All along the line the man has to play a more active and the woman a more passive part. Laugh if you like, but facts are facts. The fighting for the female happens among insects and is of universal prevalence among all animals with a backbone.

There are certain peoples who are willing to put their pride in their pockets and show their brawn for the women they wed. Among a number of North American Indian tribes when a man wants to court a girl he goes out and wrestles for her. He does not object to this strenuous test, because he believes that this is the right way to go courting. From boyhood they wrestle with each other to make them strong and manly by the time they are grown. They know that if they are weaklings they will have to be satisfied with the most unattractive women in the village. This willingness to fight for an attractive woman does not always end with their marriage. Occasionally a strong man asserts his right to take the wife of another, providing he can fight for her.

Sometimes the generous use of elbow grease is not considered enough of a test for an ardent lover. Among some native Mexican rival suitors fight duels with knives or bats. It sometimes happens that all the lovers of the girl take part in a sort of battle royal and the most powerful is the victor.

You can scarcely imagine anything funnier than the wrestling matches seen in Samoa. These tests are not for the world's championship. The men are simply willing to try their strength for the belle of the place. These contests reach a splendid state of fun when they become pulling matches. At such trials a girl places herself in the center of a circle with a suitor on both sides. They take hold of an arm and she is pulled first in one direction and then in another. The stronger man is the victor, but the girl usually pays the price for a time at least for his strength and dexterity.

There are plenty of leopards and lions in Samoa and in the Fiji Islands, and in these places there are more quarrels about love affairs than anything else. In many parts of

The Female of Every Order of Life Plays a Passive Part in Courtship.

South Africa men will make desperate fights for the women they would wed. The people of Wadai are known for their desperate fights where a pretty woman is concerned. The fights sometimes last for days with slight intermissions.

Many hundred years ago it was a custom with the Hindus of India when a princess became marriageable to hold a tournament. Many presented themselves in this contest, and the bravest and the strongest was the victor.

The same was true in Greece, and occasionally a man thought it was easier to steal a beautiful maiden than to fight for her. This was what Paris did to Helen, and his folly created the Trojan war. He was not the first nor the last one guilty of this act. Theseus had carried her away as a girl, and some years after the Trojan war Achilles wooed and won her by force.

This sex struggle is not always of a violent kind. As Darwin pointed out some years ago, many males use peaceful methods to charm the female. This is true among birds and civilized men. Among lower mammals and savages force and combat are used instead of song and persuasion.

Gyrostatic Force Illustrated With an Egg

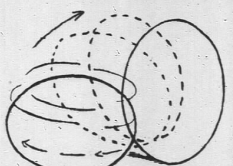

FOR a simple illustration of gyrostatic action you need go no further than the hen coop for properties with which to experiment. Roll one egg hard and leave another in its raw state. Then you are ready for the experiment.

Place the hard-boiled egg on its side on a smooth surface. Give it a spin and it will rise on one end and revolve on its tip like a top.

Make the same experiment with a raw egg. It will not rise and spin. In fact, you will find that its habits are quite different from those of the hard-boiled egg. And now you shall see the reason.

Eggs were used thus as a favorite illustration by Lord Kelvin in demonstrating gyrostatic motion before his classes at Glasgow University. In a recent lecture before the Institution of Electrical Engineers Professor A. Gray repeated the experiment with the following comment:

"The first experiment made was always that of the equilibrium of this nearly egg-shaped piece of wood, which, scientifically described, is a homogeneous prolate ellipsoid of revolution. Its surface may be imagined to be generated by the revolution of an ellipse about its longer axis. I lay it on its side, and we see that in that position it is stable for fore and aft inclinations, 'pitching' I may call the motion, and in indifferent equilibrium for port or starboard course, all without spin.

"If, however, I apply to the solid, as it lies on the tray before me, an impulsive couple with my fingers, so as to make it rotate about one of the minimum diameters (that is, of course, a diameter about which the moment of inertia is a maximum), the solid shows that when spin is applied the equilibrium is unstable. The ellipsoid at once sets itself on one end, and then rotates in stable equilibrium with the long axis nearly vertical. This is a very remarkable result. The center of gravity has been raised, and the equilibrium is now stable. The spin has altered the conditions of equilibrium completely.

"Of course, it was pointed out to us that all these phenomena are well shown by the ordinary spinning top, spun by the unwinding from it of a string when the top has been skillfully thrown from the hand. The swaying round of the axis of a top when rising just after spin to the 'sleeping' position, and the similar conical motion of the axis when the top is about to fall, give examples of precessional motion, of it, in fact, the astronomical phenomenon called precession of the equinoxes."

A raw egg will not rise to spin on end because of the unstable condition of its contents. These, being liquid, are agitated by the spinning motion and a series of whirlpool-like motions is set up in them; these produce such a confusion of forces that any slight gyrostatic effect is stopped.

Language of the Barnyard

AN EXPERIENCED poultry raiser gives the following rules, a careful study of which, he says, will aid in determining the sex of fowls by the noises they make.

"The drake wheezes, the duck quacks. The guinea cock and hen both have a peculiar, disagreeable chatter, but the hen sometimes says 'buckwheat' or 'go back,' which the cock never does. The peacock can be distinguished, even when only a few months old, by the long red pinion feathers of his wings. In the case of turkeys the breast bone of the cock is turned out at the front point, while that of the hen is straight.

"As to geese, the gabble of the common, the Embden and the Toulouseanders is faster, fiercer and higher than that of the goose, which is a slow, low bass; and the screech of the gander is fine, loud and clear, while that of the goose is a rough bass. Both gander and goose of the English gray geese have a common screech and gabble, but the screech of the goose is lazy and seems to be partly broken, making two sounds, while the gander gives one clear, loud screech without any break in it.

"The screech of the African gander is loud and hoarse, while that of the goose is clear and stops abruptly, as if bitten off at the end. The Chinese gander gives one loud, clear screech, but that of the goose seems to be broken, making two different sounds, as if the first were made by forcing his breath out and the other by drawing it back."

Why Is Yeast Needed in Bread?

WHAT is yeast used in bread? This question may sound foolish to most housewives, but let them try to answer it scientifically before passing judgment.

In the dough from which bread is made there is a lot of sugar, which contains carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen. It is necessary to ferment this sugar to make bread edible, and yeast is used because it has the power to do this.

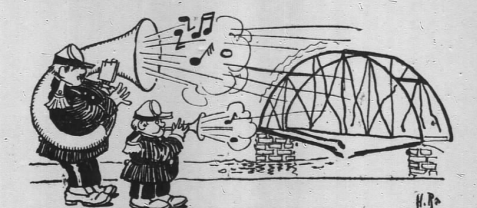

It is made from the plant having this quality. Fermenting sugar is equivalent to burning it, and there are two results. One is the formation of carbonic gas. A great deal of this gas is caught in the dough in the form of large or small bubbles, and some of it escapes into the air. The part that cannot escape causes the dough to rise and makes the bread light.

The holes in the bread are the little

Red Sea Colored by Weeds

THE drowning of Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea had nothing to do with his name. It takes this from a peculiar reddish color remarked at certain seasons of the year in parts of this sea, due to marine plants, or to reddish animalcules, called by sailors "whale feed," which float on it like scum; or to the reefs of red coral which abound in many parts of it; or, possibly, to the fact that its upper course was one of the boundaries of Edom, "the red." No biblical scholar of any repute has ever asserted that the sea took its name from the overthrow of Pharaoh.

Music Destroyer of Bridges

DOES music weaken metallic or other bridges? This question recently asked of a well-known bridge builder brought this reply:

"Measured vibrations are more trying to any kind of bridges, and particularly to suspension bridges, than irregular agitation. Music alone would not strain a bridge enough to injure it materially, but a regiment of troops keeping step to music when crossing a suspension bridge would subject it to a very severe strain. Consequently, it is customary to stop the music before troops reach the bridge, and let the men break step, and march more or less irregularly.

"The reason for all this is obvious. The structure naturally will suffer least strain when at rest. When in uniform motion the bridge acquires a momentum equal to its entire suspended weight multiplied by the velocity of the motion. It is manifest that, in the case of a heavy structure, a uniform downward vibration, be it ever so small, would develop a momentum of many tons in the direction of a breaking strain. The same disturbing forces acting irregularly, so as to counteract one another, would be far less trying to the structure."

Diamond Oldest of Riches

THE discoverer of diamonds is unknown. From references in Exodus it is apparent that the diamond was a precious stone in Egypt in those early times; and even before that it was known in India, where probably it was first obtained. The name is derived from the Greek word "adamas," meaning "unsubduable."

From Pliny, a writer of the first century, we learn that the diamond was regarded as the most valuable of all things, and only a few kings ever could afford to buy them. But as no means of artificial polishing had been discovered the stone depreciated in value, so that the ruby and the emerald became more precious. The discovery by Ludwig van Berghem, in 1476, of a mode of polishing and cutting it at once returned this gem to the first place among precious stones.

How Microbes Sour Milk

IF IT were possible to keep milk from the air it would not turn sour. But the mischievous microbe, say those who study its ways and ravages, is constantly in the air, alive, though invisible, and ready to drop into the milk when it can.

But how do microbes turn the milk sour? you ask. Well, they are very fond of sugar and delight in gratifying their liking by turning the sugar in milk into an acid which sours the milk.

Warm milk is particularly inviting to the microbe and favorable to its operations. The microbe does not get along well under chilling conditions, and that is why the sweetness of the milk can be preserved if it is kept cold.

Human Hunters Scent Game

SINCE so many nations have actually gone to fighting there are few good sportsmen left. If you want to find a thoroughbred sportsman you must look among the natives of the Brazilian forests. Especially among the Botocudo, to whom tracking game is the chief business of life. He does it with such skill that he fills the white man with awe and wonder.

However enthusiastic a huntsman you are you will feel yourself a poor sportsman after watching him for a little while. The Botocudo hunter glides stealthily through the forest. He understands every sign and habit of bird and beast. He knows how high up an armadillo displaces the leaves of the tree in passing. He can distinguish the tracks of the snake and the tortoise. He can follow the tortoise to its burrow by the scratches of its scaly armor on the mud. His sense of smell is so keen it helps him a great deal in hunting. Hidden behind the trunk of a tree he can imitate the cries of birds and beasts to bring them within range of his deadly poisoned arrow. He can even entice the alligator by making her rough eyes catch together where they lie under leaves on the river bank. If he shoots at an ape and the animal does not fall he will climb up after the animal by a hanging creeper where no white man

Boiling milk changes the sugar in such a way that the microbe cannot feed upon it.

Human Hunters Scent Game

would climb. However dark the forest is he is indifferent to this darkness. Laden with his bag of game he finds his way back to his hut by the sun and the lay of the ground.

His only rival is the Australian native. He will lie in wait behind a screen of boughs. He waits until the kangaroo comes to drink or he will track him for days in the open. He will camp by his fire to be ready for his pursuit at early dawn. He keeps unseen to leeward.

With a number hunt together they will put up a brush fence in two long wings, converging toward a pit, and so they drive the kangaroo into it. They also form great hunting parties for a battue surrounding half a mile of bushland, and with shouts and clatter they drive all the game to the center, where they can close round and dispatch them with spears and waddies. In following they show the same audacity. A native will swim under water, breathing through a reed. He merely covers his head with water weed till he gets among a flock of ducks, which one by one he pulls under and tucks into his belt. They rarely need to make use of dogs in hunting, though they had learned this way of hunting long before the white man knew anything about it. They used the dingy or native dog.

So What Alternative Had He but to Pack Up His Duds and His Title and Go Forth in Quest of Work? What Will He Do? Well, That's Up to Him, and Not One Penny of Aid Will He Get From Countess Czaky's Millions.

By BERT LENNON.

THE Countess Czaky doesn't give a snap of her titled fingers what sort of a job the count accepts. Soda-clerk, shoe salesman, chauffeur—it's all the same to her. She might even hear of his entering the fistic arena without the flicker of an aristocratic eyelash.

For the countess, stamping a jeweled heel by way of emphasis, insists that the Hungarian nobleman must prove he can make his own living before she will hand him a duplicate key to the Czaky money box. Repose in said box are enough dollars to give the ghost of Croesus the nightmare.

"I made it plain—and the count agreed—that it is not fitting for a man to live on his wife's money," the Countess Czaky has told her friend. In San Francisco. "So we have parted, temporarily at least. If the count proves that he can be independent of my fortune—why, matters will be placed on an entirely different footing. There will be no objection to our living together again."

Will the Count Stand by His Guns?

And if the count stands by the verbal guns he fired some few years ago he will stand by the bargain he made with the countess. "The American people do not understand the Hungarian heart," he said at that time. "When a Hungarian loves he will do anything for the woman he loves."

Of course, he did not add "even go to work," but that was supposed to be included in the all-embracing "anything." Regardless of Countess Czaky's talk about a trial separation, there are some who doubt if the countess will ever again live with her titled husband. They base their belief on the many love tides that have come and gone in the lives of both. Ever-changing affection has kept them in the spotlight of romance.

The Countess Czaky is the daughter of the late William Howard, an attorney prominent in Chicago years ago. When quite young she became the bride of Montgomery Bryan, and upon his death inherited several millions of dollars. With this as a wedge the pretty widow went to Europe and soon pried the lid from haughty royalty. Princes and counts and barons—poor as church mice, but willing, if properly coaxed, to raven a title green with fungus—courted her assiduously. She was the find of the season.

But the American widow hid her dollars behind a barricade of cold indifference. As yet a castle, even though mortgaged, meant nothing to her young life—besides, she was still in mourning. It was on her return to New York that she met Count Kalman I. Czaky Komorosek, a cousin of Count Laszlo Szepesni, who married Miss Gladys Vanderbilt and $20,000,000 of good American coin. Count Czaky had appeared in America and naively declared his intention of duplicating his titled cousin's feat.

Mme. Jan Kubelik, the first wife of Count Czaky, whose love for the violinist brought about a divorce.

Disclaims Fortune Hunting.

"I appreciate that the American woman is the woman par excellence of the entire world," said the count not long after meeting the pretty Mrs. Bryan. "We shall be married shortly and it is a question whether we shall go abroad on our honeymoon."

And because New York and Newport had considered the previous declarations of the count a bit too blunt he added: "I am not a fortune hunter. I am not seeking the Bryan millions. My family is eight hundred years old and I come of the best blood in Hungary."

When everything seemed to be running smoothly in the international romance the widow received several anonymous letters. They told of a previous marriage of the count. Mrs. Bryan, one fair day, exploded a bombshell under her blue-blooded suitor by refusing to wed him until he had proved he was divorced—and that no stigma attached to him.

To go back to the early marriage of the count:

In 1900, when Kubelik, then in the first flush of his newly discovered musical genius, was wooing the continent with the sweet strains of his violin, he stopped at the City of Debrecen. He gave a concert and was entertained at the home of President Von Szell of the Hungarian senate. Von Szell had a daughter—19 and beautiful. Kubelik, then only 20 years old, fell desperately in love with her.

Bravely Keeps Her Word.

The love of the boy violinist was returned by the girl, but she was engaged—and to none other than Count Czaky, who was then, as now, the son of an impoverished Hungarian family of noble rank. She asked her fiancé to release her from the engagement, but he refused. So, in spite of her tears and the lamentations of Kubelik, they were married.

If Count Czaky thought that his wife would forget the violinist he was mistaken. She corresponded with Kubelik frequently, and so flouted her love in the face of the count that finally he saw no way out of it except to give in to her wishes and consent to a separation. A divorce was obtained subsequently.

Count Retains Cheerful Air.

In July, 1904, the first Countess Czaky was married to Kubelik, and to them have been born the famous Kubelik twins.

For fully twenty-four hours Count Czaky gave an excellent imitation of a man whose life had been wrecked—then he again appeared on the boulevards of Budapest in attire gay and manner debonaire. He seemed quite willing to forget his blighted domesticity.

To return to his affair with Mrs. Bryan: While the count was busy looking up documentary proof of his divorce—and the fact that no stigma attached to him—the wealthy Mrs. Bryan came to Chicago. So did the Hungarian nobleman. He was pressed for money, the widow confided, and the constant drain on her purse caused a break between them. Besides, it had reached her ears that the count had been seen motoring with the widow of a wealthy Chicago lumberman.

Next followed a big surprise for friends of the couple. On Jan. 4, 1911, Mrs. Bryan was married in Chicago to R. D. Inman, a wealthy lumberman of Portland, Oregon. Five weeks later came another surprise—the newly wedded couple were divorced. Rumor had it that the lumberman was convinced that his wife still retained her love for the count.

Mrs. Maud Howard Bryan Inman gave a different reason. "Mr. Inman did not take his daughters into his confidence," she said. "They expected him to marry a woman of at least 50 years. I was a shock to them. They made things disagreeable. Conditions became unbearable and we reached a mutual agreement which ended in a divorce. Count Czaky was in no way connected with the affair."

The woman and her titled wooer did an exit from the stage of romance for a time, but in October of the same year they bobbed up again. At last Mrs. Maud Howard Bryan Inman had become the Countess Czaky.

Talk of Business Bore Countess.

"The American man is too self-centered," she said. "He loves to talk, but he does not understand that there is a difference between 'talk' and 'conversation.' The American man does not understand that you get terribly bored on the subject of business."

"An educated woman needs a good deal more to occupy her mind. I am very fond of reading and music, as many people know. Altogether, the life that a foreigner offers a woman is entirely different from that which an American has to offer. You know and I know that if a woman is pretty and charming she does not want to have to think so, but she wants to be told the same old story, not once, but a hundred times."

"The American man does not think it necessary to make love to his own wife."

It does seem now as though the Countess Czaky had changed her mind a bit and would just as soon be "bored on the subject of business," with the count doing the talking—and having some sort of a business to talk about.

It really does seem so.

Women Suffer War's Wage

By FREDERICK STARR.

[Professor of Anthropology, University of Chicago.]

HOWEVER much we decry war and its horrors, I believe one of its compensations will be a stronger, better race of men. In spite of the awful heartaches that come to men in leaving their families and having their natural ties broken, there is certain inspiration in the thought that on the courage and dexterity of its armed men depends the future integrity of the various European countries.

Woman's outlook and opportunities are to be enlarged. Thousands of responsibilities are already to be thrust on the shoulders of myriads of women. Responsibilities they have never known, or only in a small degree. In England women are replacing men in factories and doing work they have never attempted before. These positions are being offered to them at men's wages, a higher scale than women have ever known.

In Germany great numbers of women are doing service as street car conductors, motor men, guards at railway stations and even railroad conductors. The schools are being closed and every available inch of land is being tilled and cultivated by the women and the children. As the war goes on more and more will women be yoked to toil and forced to try themselves in new occupations.

Hundreds of others are learning lessons of self-reliance and steeling their nerves on battlefields as Red Cross nurses and in hospitals. Women and society both will pay the price of these added responsibilities they are forced to accept. I believe this is a terrible catastrophe which will not be righted readily.

I honestly believe that too many women are already doing work that men should be doing for them. This is a fact in America and certainly will be truer in Europe as a result of the war. Many dire results must come through women trying to do men's work. Any kind of work that overtaxes woman's strength means weakening of her strength and the vitality of the future. In many kinds of work it weakens the quality of the work and the general standard of efficiency.

EVERY SUNDAY IN THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION OUR COUNTRY By OUR PRESIDENT

A Fascinating, Inspiring History by President Woodrow Wilson
An Intensely Absorbing Story of the History of the United States

Why You Should Read This Series

You have probably neither the time nor the inclination to read page after page of ponderous volumes of history, mostly written in a very dry and tedious style.

But this series constitutes a tabloid history of the United States, written in easy to read English of the best kind.

It makes clear and comprehensive much that is vague or entirely incomprehensible in our present relations to and attitude toward the warring European nations.

It gives the origin and history of the Monroe doctrine, how it may be interpreted; our rights on sea and land; what really led up to the war of 1812 with England; the stopping and searching of our ships at that time; the position it took then and how it compares with our position today.

The younger members of the family will find this history invaluable as an aid to them in their school and college studies. They will read it as they would a story, and look out for it each Sunday.

Teachers in public and high schools, academies and colleges will recommend their pupils to read this history because it will give them in a concrete, easy to understand form the history of their country.

Those who have already made a special study of this subject will welcome the opportunity to read President Wilson's presentation of the facts of history and the deductions he makes from these facts.

There has never been a time when it has been more important for every citizen to be familiar with the history of our country, and with our position and rights both as a nation and in relation to other nations.

WOODROW WILSON

A Short Extract From President Wilson on the War of 1812, Showing How History Is Repeating Itself in the War of 1915, and the Value of This Series in Giving an Understanding of Present Conditions.

"The trade of the shipping ports had of course suffered immensely at the hands of both England and Napoleon. But the profits of the neutral carrier were enormous, nevertheless, in that troubled time. Ship building went forward very prosperously in America despite every order and decree of the belligerents; and so long as there was no embargo to restrain and make them outlaws at home, merchants almost cheerfully took the risks at sea. The embargo which immediately preceded the war was intended, of course, to call the shipping in for its own protection; but merchants hurried every available vessel to sea as soon as they heard it was to be passed, in order to be beforehand with it and take the risks congress sought to protect them against.

"Congress was obliged to resort at last to the very excise taxes which all republicans had so hotly condemned the federalists for imposing; to lay direct taxes on such articles of personal use as household furniture and watches; and finally, when the war was over but not the difficulties of finance, to re-establish the Bank of the United States (April, 1816). A few light duties on imports could not support the government when every principal harbor of the country was blockaded.

"For almost three weary years the war dragged on. It was a war upon the borders; the long northern frontier, the defenseless coast, the easy points of approach on the gulf. As in the Revolution so now, the heart of the country went untouched. * * * On the coasts English fleets swarmed thicker and thicker until almost every important port was effectually closed."

Many Attend Dinner-Dance At Piedmont Driving Club

One hundred and fifty people enjoyed the informal dinner-dance at the Piedmont Driving Club last night, the occasion one of the most delightful in the spring series. Dinner was served on the terrace at tables decorated with spring flowers, and dancing was enjoyed there. Among those entertaining were Mr. and Mrs. Edward C. Peters, who gave a party to Miss Louise Black and Mr. John F. McDougall. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. This year must unconsciously have presented itself to each hearer in an unfortunately small but enthusiastic audience which availed itself of the rare opportunity of hearing Dr. Kraft. ful touch the great organ yielded all the subtle shading and rich coloring of a mighty orchestra. There were brilliant climaxes, thrilling dynamic effects and a wonderfully skillful manipulation of the swell pedals, which has always been a marked characteristic of Dr. Kraft's work, and there is a temperamental quality, a potent individuality and an undiminished reserve force which is irresistibly magnetic and aways in audience in obedience to every mood.

In charming contrast to the work of heretofore grandeur was a "Reverie" by Debussy, a composition of utmost grace and beauty rendered by Dr. Kraft with exquisite style and finish. The program as a whole, demonstrated the highest evolution of the pipe organ as an instrument, and proclaimed Dr. Kraft its master exponent of its latest possibilities.

The course in domestic science will include the following subjects:

1. Composition of the body and of foods.
2. Nutritive and fuel value of foods.
3. Food and dietetics.
4. The problem—cost of food.
5. Planning nourishing foods within the range of the average salary.
6. The balanced meal.
7. Diet for the sick.
8. Special foods.

Automatic Refrigerators

WE ARE the exclusive agents in Atlanta for these refrigerators, and we take an especial pride in introducing this line to those who do not know its superior points.

The AUTOMATIC REFRIGERATOR preserves food-stuffs as they should be preserved, and food flavors do not mix. There is always one circulating current of air in the food chamber, going up, and another current in the ice chamber, always going down. Consequently, the air is always cold and sweet.

The AUTOMATIC REFRIGERATOR has a SANITARY WATER COOLER as shown in the illustration above. With this built-in water cooler the ice does not come in contact with the water, nor impart its impurities to the water, but your water is kept pure and clean, free from the germs that ice often carries.

Our prices range from—

$18.00 to $75.00

RAILROAD MEN ENJOY PICNIC AT GRANT PARK

Members of Roadway Departments of Two Roads Have Great Time in Atlanta.

Members of the roadway departments of the Georgia railway and the Atlanta and West Point railroad, supervisors, general foremen, their children and their wives, totalling 400, enjoyed an outing at Grant Park Saturday as the guests of the roads.

To give the men who watch the tracks an opportunity to enjoy themselves for at least one day has long been the desire of Charles A. Wickram, president and general manager of the West Point route and general manager of the Georgia railroad, and O. T. Nelson, superintendent of the maintenance of way of the West Point route and the Georgia railroad. It was carried to a most happy culmination with the barbecue in the park.

Special trains covering all parts of the two railway systems brought the happy families and the bachelors to Atlanta early Saturday morning. Special trolley cars carried them to the scene of the festivities, where they were highly entertained through the efforts of reception committees representing the two railroads under the direction of Joe Billups, general passenger agent for the roads.

"I've enjoyed the day so much," said everyone as they ate and laughed and talked around the long tables spread with a regular barbecue menu. But no one apparently enjoyed the occasion more than President Wickram, who quickly became acquainted with every lady and lady on the grounds. The barbecue, the fireworks and the salads, the lemonade and the many other things provided for consumption were grand successes, as everyone here witness. "We talked and departed here entirely to Marcus Edwards, the negro cook on the presidents private car," said Mr. Billups.

AUTO AND OCCUPANTS DESTROYED BY DYNAMITE

Syracuse, N. Y., May 22.—Four persons were killed, three fatally injured and seven others seriously injured here today when an automobile loaded with dynamite, said to be used to search for the body of a drowned boy, exploded. Shards of bodies and clothing were thrown on telephone wires and scattered for a distance of 150 feet. The dead included an unidentified boy, who was killed in the arms of his sister, who was standing near the automobile. His sister also is dying.

About fifteen sticks of dynamite were in the automobile. The coroner has started an investigation.

MISS ANN PATTERSON QUEEN OF CARNIVAL

Exciting Contest Conducted by Georgia Tech Students Comes to an End.

The queen of the Tech carnival, and her four maids of honor, after an exciting and close race, were announced Saturday night by the Tech students. Miss Ann Patterson, one of the most popular girls in the school, was selected queen. Her four maids of honor were announced as follows: Miss Wynne Nance, Miss May Crichton, Miss Marion Stearns and Miss Margaret Olson.

The coronation ceremony will be not only elaborate but very unique. In addition to the platform on which the queen will be seated on the Tech campus, there will be platforms on which side shows will be given by the different fraternities.

PLAN NEW OYSTER LAWS.

Meeting for Purpose to Convene at Brunswick.

Brunswick, Ga., May 22.—(Special).—For the purpose of mapping out radical changes in the fish and oyster laws of Georgia, which is expected, will prove beneficial to the state, representatives of the coast counties of Georgia will hold a meeting in Brunswick Tuesday afternoon. Representatives will be present from Chatham, McIntosh, Bryan and Camden counties, and the meeting will also be attended by State Game Commissioner Davis and J. G. Arrow, of St. Marys, who is slated to succeed Mr. Davis at the expiration of his present term of office. At the request of the Brunswick Board of Trade, an expert of the bureau of fisheries of the United States will also be in the city for the meeting.

The meeting of representatives from coast counties follows a campaign started some time ago for laws for the betterment of the fish and oyster business in the state. It has been realized that the oyster industry should be brought under the state, but as it is at present very unregulated, due principally to the fact that there are no adequate laws. It is the plan of those who have interested themselves in the matter to have all oyster boats along the Georgia coast policed in future and to defray the expenses of such service, a revenue will be placed on oysters and those engaged in the business will be taxed probably so much per barrel or bushel.

Travelers Name Smith.

Shreveport, La., May 22.—John L. Smith, of West Point, Miss., was elected grand councillor of the United Commercial Travelers of Mississippi and Louisiana at the afternoon session here today. The crown of Valachi, Miss., was chosen sentinel. Meridian, Miss., was named as the next meeting place.

TWO YOUNG GIRLS DROWNED IN RIVER SOUTH OF CAIRO

Cairo, Ga., May 22.—(Special).—Lucille and Estelle Logue, thirteen and eleven years old, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Logue, of Cairo, were drowned in Ochokechee river, fifteen miles south of town, yesterday afternoon. A party, consisting of Mr. and Mrs. Logue, of Cairo; Mr. and Mrs. Truluck, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, of Whigham, and the children of each family had gone on a camp, especially for Mrs. Logue's health, she having been ill for several months. In the early afternoon the entire party went in wading when the two Logue girls, along with the little daughter of Mr. Harrison, fell into deep water and began crying for their fathers to save them. Every effort possible succeeded in saving only the little Harrison girl.

Divers recovered the body of Estelle Logue last night and the body of Lucille Logue at about noon today.

11TH DISTRICT SCHOOL COMPLETES BIG YEAR

"Odorless" and "Hygienic" Refrigerators

As Famous As They're Good

A SENSATIONAL
CUT IN PRICES

OF REFRIGERATORS

There is no secret about this transaction—nothing to hide. We were fortunate, of course, to get such an opportunity. You'll be equally as fortunate if you take advantage of this refrigerator sale.

HERE ARE THE PLAIN FACTS

We know the Odorless and Hygienic Refrigerators thoroughly. We have sold them for years. We are entirely familiar with the uniform satisfaction they have always given our customers. For these reasons we have the utmost confidence in their genuine goodness and great value.

Some time ago the makers of these renowned refrigerators evidently over-estimated orders on these particular styles, so made us a very attractive proposition. We accepted delivery of all they had at greatly reduced prices. This is why we can now cut prices practically half in two.

JUST A FEW SERIOUS WORDS ABOUT THE HYGIENIC REFRIGERATORS

The handsome rounded cases, which are made of solid oak, not ash or other soft wood made to imitate oak.

Double dead air space between three thicknesses of charcoal sheeting, making an absolutely effective insulation.

Provision chambers of heavy galvanized steel, white enamel and genuine one-piece porcelain without a crack or crevice for the lodgment of dirt or germs.

The ice pans made of one piece of galvanized steel and so formed that the refrigerators cannot leak.

Removable flues, leaving no lurking place for germs and rendering cleaning easy and rapid.

Patent interior drip traps, which, with the drain pipes, are easily removed. Center air circulation.

Woven wire shelves. Hardware of cast brass, Roman gold finish.

SPREAD OUT THE PAYMENTS AS FAR AS YOU LIKE

Even at these tremendous reductions, your promise to pay has cash value with us. Your credit is good for whatever you want in the Furniture or Home Furnishing line. We realize that we can best help ourselves by helping you. Call and let's talk the matter over. Every courtesy will be shown you, and you won't be urged to buy.

Only 5% PLUS for the Best "Non-Skid"

THERE are 57, or more, varieties of Non-Skid Tires. Some of these actually prevent Skidding, even in Wet Weather and on slippery pavements.

Many of them wear out the Cotton Fabric of the Tire long before its time, through the excessive heat which thick Treads develop in the Rubber, between layers, by friction.

And practically all of them, that make serious claims to Non-Skid efficiency, cost you 10% to 30% more than Plain Tread Tires of same brand and material.

The makers of Non-Skids say it Costs them this 10% to 30% more to take the Skids off their Plain Tires. We do it for 5%.

Here's how, and Why!

FORTY-FIVE years of Rubber working (in what is now the World's largest Rubber Factory) has taught us a few Kinks and Short-cuts that are not common to the Trade.

One of these now comes to the help of your Pocket-book.

Through the simple process of Thinking Hard (and being Candid with ourselves) we have found a Short-Cut to make the best Safety Tread ever put on a Tire cost us only about 5% more than it costs us to make the Plain-Tread of similar quality.

By testing out these Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires on a large number of Taxicabs where they could be competitively observed and carefully checked up at the end of each day's use) and by comparing their actual performance with that of our own, and other Plain-Treads, of much higher price, we have had this fact forced upon us—

That there is SURPRISINGLY more Mileage, in Goodrich Safety Tread Tires, than in our own, or any other make of Plain-Tread Tires. SO MUCH more Mileage, for only 5% more Cost looked so good to us that we decided to give Car Owners the benefit.

Here's what we now offer you! The best Non-Skid Safety Tread ever put on the market, at ONLY 5% HIGHER PRICE than our own best Plain Tread.

NO Vibration—no Tread Separation due to isolated Projections—no clumsy, Resilience-killing stiffness.

But—instead, a practical hinge between each series of Grips, which breaks up the "Traction Wave" in the Tire, and thereby adds enormously to Mileage, at only 5% more Cost.

We could well justify an increased charge for this Feature, equal to the increased Mileage which results from it.

But we don't take advantage of that.

Will you appreciate the Good-Faith behind this offer?

THE B. F. GOODRICH CO., Akron, Ohio.

Goodrich prices for the best non-skid tires are only 5% more than the prices for Goodrich Smooth Treads.

Note the following table of comparative prices on non-skid tires. Columns headed "A," "B," "C" and "D" represent four highly advertised tires.

Size	Goodrich Safety Tread	OTHER MAKES
	"A"	"B"	"C"	"D"

Why Housecleaning Is Burdensome

By DOROTHY DOLAN.

MOST women find housecleaning a terrible task because they do not approach it as they should. It means a piece of work should mean a pleasure. To clean the house from top to bottom, to have painting and paperhanging done, to remodel old things and to weed out the objects that cannot be repaired. In the second place, they do not plan the task of housecleaning right, and, finally, they make it a terrible task instead of a pleasure.

The attitude taken toward this large and important work is an essential feature. The dread of most things is largely in the thought. You cannot worry and at the same time approach your work in an intelligent, self-reliant manner.

Once a Year.

Be satisfied to undertake this work once a year, and when you do, make it as intelligent and thorough a piece of work as you can. A week or two before you begin take paper and pencil in hand and inspect every room and everything in the room thoroughly.

Make notes of the objects you will clean and those things you are going to have cleaned outside. Examine the furnishings next for repair and changes. By repair I mean the mending of curtains, the making over of rugs and the mending of brocade-brass. The repairs you intend making should be undertaken before or after housecleaning; those you have done for you can be done during cleaning time. The most important point to remember is a question of changes. This should be considered carefully. Many an inexperienced housekeeper gets excited when it comes to questions of selecting and casting off their furnishings. They do not always realize that carpets and furniture that have outlived their usefulness for the living rooms can be cleaned and repaired for bedrooms. If you find that your carpets are showing wear in spots have a few at a time made into rugs.

Use the money you would have spent in new carpets in putting in one or two hardwood floors. If you find certain pieces of furniture old-fashioned put them in the garage for a time. By leaving them there for six months or a year they will show a new look, or, if in fashion or you will enjoy them as much as though they had.

Do not try to rip up three or four rooms at once. This is an important point not to be overlooked.

Divide the Work.

Especially is this true in a small apartment, where space is extremely limited. In selecting the rooms you can either take two adjoining rooms or take one room on each floor, but try to keep as much order and system about it as you can. It is often wiser to commence in the attic and work your way down. It will give you room for furniture you have discarded and you may find other things that may be of service to you. Put the things that you have no immediate use for in boxes and label them. Also check off the things that you take out, so you will know what you have on hand.

Attack one bedroom at a time, but in order when cleaned. Whether the walls are to be cleaned or repaired it is well to take the furniture in the hall. It will give you an excellent chance to clean your furniture thoroughly without spoiling the room.

Before putting the furniture back the wood work can be washed and the floors polished. Then you can put back the furniture. Before cleaning another room you can wash and put fresh paper in the closets and in the bureau drawers.

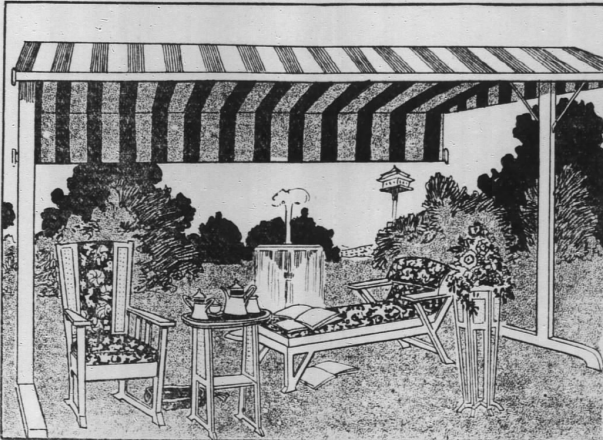

Use a System.

The only furnishings that you can take out in all the rooms at once are the rugs and curtains. You can dust the pictures and wash the large ornaments in the room. Cover them with cheesecloth to keep them from getting dirty. You will have to beat the upholstered furniture in the hall and the rugs in the back yard, unless you have a carpet sweeper. If you have a vacuum cleaner you can do this without upsetting the room.

The oil floor mops are useful in polishing the hard wood floors. As for the curtains, if you wash them either put them back at once or fold them carefully and lay them in a chest for the summer. Once clean, there will be no difficulty in hanging them in the fall.

If it never occurs for a woman to paper the walls, wash the wood work and the doors for the winter. Likewise, if there are many windows in the house and you have little assistance in doing your housework, let somebody wash the windows for you. You can either get a man to do this or give the work to a colored woman or a fixed price per window.

NOTHING could be more gay and alluring than a sun parlor or improvised tearoom on the lawn. Stunning effects may be obtained by use of the so-called "Austrian" styles, with upholstery in the ornate futurist styles now so popular. One may imagine what a delightful spot these may be made from which to speed one's men folk off to their daily grind in the city.

Home Decoration and Furnishing

By MME. MAISON.

A RATHER stunning thing in sun parlor or breakfast room furnishing is the so-called "Austrian" style, with upholstery in the striking futurist design, which has its place for just such use. The wood finish comes in oak, silver gray and copper green, with cretonnes to harmonize. Very gay and alluring are these rooms. When there is a standard or pedestal to support a jardiniere or fernery with one of those fascinating bird cages hanging above it and the table set with china done in a riot of colors, one may imagine what a charming spot this is from which to speed one's men folk off to the daily grind. These bird cages are very popular, and it is not necessary to have a real live bird; a painted wooden one will carry out the artistic effect, and there will be no care or responsibility of the live one.

By the way, there are many new finishes in the fine red furniture. Either turned or frosted green is excellent, and an old ivory finish is most graceful, with a dull red or gray-blue predominating the cushions. A chaise longue may be obtained in most any of these styles, and will add much to one's comfort and joy.

Interior Stain.

I wrote you once in regard to dining and living room furniture and was glad for the advice. Upper part of house will be white enamel trim, with mahogany doors and glass knobs. The first floor will have oak in front part.

Hints for Housekeepers

Chamberlains should be picked over often if you wish them to keep long.

To keep the hands white wash them with oatmeal water.

Bedclothing should be thoroughly aired in the sun every day.

A little vinegar added to plums while stewing adds to the flavor.

To cut an onion without shedding tears, sprinkle it with salt and shake in front of a hot fire.

To keep a kitchen table white, wash it first with vinegar, then scrub it as usual.

Natural or "unpolished" silk is far more wholesome than the shiny-white kind.

A tablespoonful of vinegar added to a pot roast will make it more palatable and tender.

To keep white paint bright, rub it with a clean kerseene cloth after the ordinary cleaning.

Never rub soap on a stain without first wetting it and partly washing it out in cold water.

Horsehair is better scraped than grated, and should be prepared just before it is needed.

Of a clean leg of mutton. Crowd in a mixed seasoning of salt, red and black pepper. Add a little minced onion, a little dry mustard and powdered herbs. Brush all over with melted butter or soft bacon fat. Then sprinkle lightly with salt, set on a rack in a roasting pan. Put into a very hot oven.

Let brown, then rub over a tart jelly melted in a little hot water and envelop it in a crust of flour and water, made very stiff and rolled half an inch thick. Pinch the edges tight together, lay back in the pan, cover and bake in a hot oven. Take up, break the blanket carefully, lift out the meat and pour the gravy over from the envelop into a small saucepan. Add to it either hot claret or a spoonful of tart jelly, along with tabasco, boil up and serve in a boat.

Broiled Shad Roe with Bacon—Take six pieces of fresh shad roe. Dip thoroughly with a towel, lay on a dish and oak floors, pine in the kitchen. What color stain would you use in the front part of the house? I am so tired of golden oak.

Gladiolus, indeed, if I could help you in your plans before. For the downstairs you will find that oak will take most any desired stain very well; avoid "golden oak," it is not good to live with and does not lend itself to blending softly with decorations and furniture. A dark English or Jacobean tone is best, or a rather greenish gray. The best plan will be to see a sample card of wood with the various stains and choose what will go best with your furniture and the color scheme you have in mind.

and season with a good pinch of salt and two tablespoonfuls of sweet oil. Roll gently to avoid breaking and arrange them on a broiler. Broil them for six minutes and pour over a maitre d'hotel sauce. Decorate with slices of broiled bacon and six quarters of lemon.

Tomatoes Stuffed With Cucumber—Peel five tomatoes. Cut off the stem ends and scoop out the pulp thus forming the cups. Set turned upside down in a cool place. Chop fine the solid pulp from the tomatoes and one cucumber. Chill before chopping. Stir into a cupful of cream dressing and fill the tomatoes with the mixture. Salt and pepper will be needed in addition to that in the dressing. If at hand a pimento may be chopped with the other ingredients or two tablespoonfuls of grated house radish may be used. Serve at once on lettuce leaves.

It is well that men and women and tastes should be very different. A lover of flowers will tell you, though, she has a preference for roses or violets. She loves asters, dahlias, jonquills, orchids and a great many more cultivated and wild flowers. It is just this splendid array of form, color and perfume that makes so many lovers of flowers.

Shakespeare knew that there are as many types of women as there are different kinds of flowers. He loved to write about the virtues and overlook the weaknesses of other women. If you go through a half dozen or more of Shakespeare's plays you will find many of the women chums and all on friendly terms, even to the women in monastic positions. They are kind, gracious and even go out of the way to do many little kindnesses for each other. This is only a mark of good breeding.

A knock is never a boast, especially where a man and woman are concerned. Therefore, if you want to be admired be a Shakespearean type of woman. This means to be sincere and individual. Be proud, but not too proud, about your charms. Do not be afraid to speak kindly and act well toward other women.

Dear Vivian, I have been going with a young woman six months and I want to marry her. The only thing that pertains me is that I have not the courage to propose. Can I write to her and ask her to marry me, or can I propose over the telephone?

Worried.

It is one thing to appreciate your good qualities and another to thrust those virtues on others. Rosalind knows that she is pretty and vivacious just as Portia knows that she is brilliant and interesting. Both women are grateful for their blessings, but they make no effort to make others appreciate their good qualities.

These women of Shakespeare's creation can teach the most up-to-date emancipated young woman many an important lesson. If you want to be admired and counted worthy while being sincere. Sincerity and fairness may win favor for a time, but, like most things that are platted, they tarnish readily. If sincerity is among the most lasting qualities, modesty is the one that is the most acceptable.

Novelties In Home Entertainment

By DAME CURTESY.

A GROUP of patriotic young people are going to honor the local G. A. R. on Memorial day by inviting them to a camp fire to be held in a hall which will be decorated simply with American flags. Two tents will be erected with cleverly arranged "trees" in front done with red bannel and electric lights. The Boy Scouts will give an exhibition drill, then there will be a program of old-time war songs and ballads that were popular in '61. Some of them will be illustrated by living pictures shown on the small stage and at the close will be "The Blue and the Gray."

Afterward, before the serving of refreshments, there will be anecdotes and reminiscences by the "old soldiers." A bevy of pretty girls will serve doughnuts, coffee, sandwiches and all kinds of pie. They will be gowned as "Red Cross" nurses. A feature will be a sailor who will peddle his wares from a handcart.

A Daisy Fortune Booth.

At a recent bazaar this daisy booth made a goodly sum for the treasury. The decorations were entirely of green crepe paper and paper daisies. Over the booth this huge sign was placed: "Let the Daisies Tell Your Fortunes."

There was a "Vassar" daisy chain, across the counter made from a procession of white daisies daisies carrying "parlades of daisies." Then there were large daisies containing 120 petals, as the bazaar lasted two days and evenings, many fortunes were prepared. A fortune was written on each petal with invisible ink; the petal was sold in this case at 10 cents, as it was in a wealthy community where 10 cents was no object when "fortunes" were concerned, but I think it would be a fairer sum to charge. Then the petal was ironed with an electric iron to common everyday flat iron will answer the purpose) and the fate of the purchaser was herewith revealed. The attendants were gowned in white, with daisy wreaths in their hair. The background of the booth was made from dark green cheesecloth studded with white daisies.

Questions and Answers.

A Bible Contest.

I am sending you a contest which I arranged for my Sunday school class.

My son is to be married out of town and when he returns with his bride I want to give them a reception. How soon would this be proper and what hours in the evening are best? Tell me what right refreshments are to be served for such an affair. Presently be none of the bride's family present, so who should be in the receiving line? Your department has helped me greatly through all my troubles. I send a favor before. I enjoy reading what others have asked and your helpful replies.

M. L.

What to Do.

Myself and husband with the bride and bridegroom will be just right for the receiving party, and ask some intimate friends to assist in making themselves agreeable in the room, ask people to the dining-room, to be served and have someone to preside at the punch bowl, conveniently placed for all. I think it would be best to let the young people get rested and comfortably unpacked and then have the reception from 8 to 11 p. m. about four weeks after their return. Serve chicken salad, sandwiches, oysters, ice cream and cake, coffee and the punch.

There is another great quality that Shakespeare recognized every woman should have to win the favor of the opposite sex and to stand well with other women. She must be willing to appreciate the virtues and overlook the weaknesses of other women. ASHLEY STILL IN FAVOR OF CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL

Will Ask Council to Defer Action on Recommendation of the Bond Committee.

Councilman Claude L. Ashley has completed a tour and personal investigation of the four high schools of the city and will ask general council Monday to delay action on the recommendation of the bond committee that three new high schools be established to replace the four now in operation.

At the last meeting of general council Mr. Ashley introduced a resolution directing the mayor to name a committee of three to work out details for a consolidated high school for both boys and girls, to provide for ample playgrounds and athletic fields and for domestic science and manual training departments.

Mayor Pro Tem, I. N. Ragsdale has announced that he will name the committee following the meeting Monday.

If council passes favorably on the plan. The proposed plan of the bond committee to establish two girls' high schools in different sections of the city and a central boys' high school will not relieve the situation, declared Mr. Ashley Saturday. "By having a big central high school for all the pupils it would be conducted on the order of a city academy and several new schools would be required to be built at an additional expense over the present expense of the four separate institutions."

He has made a personal inspection of each high school during the past year, having conferred with the principals and with those familiar with the operation of such schools and I am more convinced than ever that this is the most feasible plan. I believe that the plan to have the consolidated school and would be more willing to lay out school bonds if they knew such a plan would be established."

Pres. Culberson to Attend Annual Meeting at Tybee Of Cotton Seed Crushers

For the first time in its history, the Cotton Seed Crushers' Association of Georgia will be honored by the presence of the president of the interstate association, Hon. J. J. Culberson, of Texas, newly elected head of the interstate association, is expected to attend the annual meeting of the Seed Crushers' Association of Georgia which will be held at Hotel Tybee, Tybee Island, Ga., June 14 and 15.

President Culberson made the statement while in Atlanta en route to New York that he would use every effort to attend this conference before returning to his home in Texas. This will be the first and probably the only state association meeting which President Culberson will be able to attend in the summer. The Georgia association feels significantly honored at this distinction.

Secretary Culberson of the Cotton Seed Crushers' Association of Georgia, now formulating the business program for the convention, which will include speakers of national prominence, complete details of which will be announced shortly.

The entertainment features provided for this meeting by the city of Savannah among them the most elaborate ever planned for a state convention, and the interest in the forthcoming meeting is extremely high, as a result of which the largest attendance in the history of the state association will, in all probability, gather at the three days session.

As previously announced, business sessions will be held in the morning only, the afternoon being given over to carrying out the entertainment features provided.

MRS. HAMMOND TO TALK ON THE NEGRO PROBLEM

Mrs. J. D. Hammond, of Augusta, the wife of the president of Payne college, will be the principal speaker, Monday evening at the fourth Atlanta University conference for the study of race problems. The subject will be "Inter-Racial Cooperation for Human Betterment in the South."

Mrs. Hammond's interest in the welfare of the negroes is well known, and her talk is anticipated with interest. She is the author of "In Black and White," a book that has contributed much toward economic adjustments between the white people and the negroes in the south.

NO ORGAN CONCERT AT AUDITORIUM TODAY

Owing to the fact that the Auditorium-Armory is being used for other purposes today, there will be no organ recital this afternoon. However, the Atlanta Music Festival association, through City Organist Edwin C. Hart, announced that the organ concert will take place, as usual, on Monday and Tuesday evening Sunday thereafter except when the Auditorium is needed for some other purpose.

Sermon by Rev. Hendley.

Rev. A. C. Hendley will preach this morning at 10 o'clock in the Junior United Methodist Church and in the evening at 7 o'clock in the Junior United Methodist Church. Members are requested to meet at the corner of East and Third streets not later than 10:45 and go in a body to the church.

FIRST OF NEW BARGES LAUNCHED ON OCMULGEE

Ceremony Marks Revival of River Navigation for the City of Macon.

Macon, Ga., May 22.—(Special.)—Barge No. 1 of the Macon-Atlantic Navigation company, was launched this afternoon in the presence of fully two thousand spectators, who gathered on the bank of the Ocmulgee at the seventh street wharf, to see the boat take the plunge.

The barge, 120 feet long and constructed entirely of steel, slid into the water like a toy in a basin. There was no mishap, and when the craft had righted itself, it was found that it drew only eight and three-quarter inches of water.

It will take about thirty days to install the engine, after which the boat will be put in active service between Macon and Brunswick. The launching of the barge is considered one of the most important events in the history of Macon, for it marks the beginning of a revival of river navigation that means a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars every year to Macon merchants. Already plans are being considered for the construction of a second barge, similar to the one launched today.

Some months ago a company was organized here with a capitalization of $100,000 to operate the barge. Many people have been skeptical about the project, but the fact that the barge has been launched is proof that the project is not a pipe dream. The draft of the class of the boat launched today is only eight and three-quarter inches when the river is at its lowest stage.

It was announced today that the Macon freight bureau, supported by C. W. Walker, vice president of the barge, and J. W. Hughes, Edwards and Walker, will represent the barge in the appropriation of $200,000 a year for three consecutive years for work on the Atlanta waterway of rivers.

M'CORD TO LEAVE TODAY TO ATTEND TRADE CONFERENCE

Joseph A. M'CORD, governor of the Federal Reserve bank of Atlanta, will leave today at noon for Washington, D. C., where he will attend the conference of business men and financiers of the United States with representatives of the republics of South America upon trade and financial relations of the United States and the southern countries.

The object of the conference is to bring about closer trade and financial relations. Transportation, commercial and financial features will be discussed. One of the conditions which the conference will attempt to bring about is the establishment of a dollar credit system instead of the pound system which has heretofore allowed the London banker to become the middle man between the United States manufacturer and his South American client.

THIRD DISTRICT COLLEGE HOLDS COMMENCEMENT

America, Ga., May 22.—(Special.)—Commencement exercises of the Third District Agricultural and Mechanical college, a state institution, were held here this afternoon, the graduates receiving certificates and diplomas. One hundred and ten students attended the college during the session, probably the largest enrollment of any of the eleven congressional district colleges. Congressman Charles R. Crisp delivered the annual address to the graduates. At 4 o'clock the board of trustees and faculty were entertained at a college banquet. The trustees, in meeting, adopted resolutions requesting the Georgia legislature to appropriate $20,000 to restore the fire-damaged building and auditorium, destroyed by fire in April.

ALWAYS STRIVING TO DO BETTER

This has been our policy for over 30 years. We have made wonderful progress; we have made improvements; we have learned much about Service and Efficiency—BUT, we are still striving to do better. Experience has taught us much about what the public requires, and what it expects of us. Experience has also taught us to be on the alert constantly to get "what the public wants." Try us out—you will find we have exactly what you want and that our prices are much lower than elsewhere quoted.

For Cars of Business and Pleasure

Maintained car efficiency is largely a matter of tires. While the tire bill itself may not seem excessive, the jolt and grind that ordinary cushion tires transmit to the engine, and the car itself, frequently means a car out of commission—loss in time, money and service.

Motz Cushion Tires have solved the tire problem on many pleasure cars and light delivery cars.

Motz Tires have the resiliency of properly inflated pneumatics. This resiliency is due to the dual treads (A) and the Motz undercut sides (B) and slantwise elastic bridges (C) that give and yield (D) like the air in a pneumatic tire.

Motz Cushion Tires

The Guarantee

Motz Tires are guaranteed for ten thousand miles on electric pleasure cars; seven thousand miles on commercial cars, when applied according to their rated carrying capacity. Many have traveled twenty thousand and even twenty-five thousand miles without trouble.

Luxemburg's Girl Ruler and Her Five Fatherless Sisters Form a Pathetic Background to the War

Princess Antoinette, Next to Youngest of the Six Sisters—She Is Considered Even More Beautiful Than Her Royal Highness, Adelaide.

By STERLING HEILIG.

WHEN the German army entered Luxembourg on Aug. 2 a lovely young girl went out to meet them and barred the way with her automobile, who was the ruler of the land.

"Your grand ducal highness had best go home and play the piano," said General Von Bulow. Tears stood in her eyes as she went.

Thus Marie Adelaide was on her dignity when, three weeks later, the kaiser transported his headquarters from Mayence to her little capital and stayed a month. He put up at the German legation, with his generals, courtiers and cooks. Machine guns stood on the roof and the streets around were barred. From his window he had a sweet view of hills, valleys and little River Alzette; and he would sit long and gaze.

As to the Ruins.

"What are those ruins I see from my window?" he asked the grand duchess on his formal call.

"Sire," she replied, "they are the remains of a fortress constructed by Vauban for the French king, Louis XIV."

Conversation languished. Again the polite kaiser ventured:

"And the charming road up to them."

"Sire, they were of a chateau built by the Marquis de Créqui after he had dictated peace to the Elector of Brandenburg." Conversation languished more. Again the polite kaiser ventured:

"Has it any history?"

"Sire, but little," replied Marie Adelaide, "except that in 1795 along it General Anberst forced the imperialists to capitulate." Then she mentioned her automobile permit. When the Germans entered they promised to respect all constitutional rights. Yet Luxemburgers may not automobile over their own roads without permission.

"Even I carry a permit," she said, "and my cabinet ministers must have a pass, signed and dated by a Prussian major."

"It is for your own protection," said the kaiser.

Marie Adelaide could not see it, and resolved to be very stiff whenever she should meet the kaiser in his big gray car striped garnet. "There he comes!" exclaimed her 12-year-old sister Sophie, as they rolled be-

Said Her Royal Highness to the Kaiser: "You have changed all the pretty names of our towns and villages. You have turned Lincieres into Junglinster, and Merise into Mersch. Mersch! La Rochette has become Fels, Rosiere is Roeser, and sweet Andelhem is Hosbert! Is it a military necessity? My people are worried." Said the Kaiser to Her Royal Highness: "What is that delicious perfume you are using?"

side the Alzette. "Chauffeur, to the right!" began the wounded beauty. But it was the kaiser who did the snubbing, because his auto swerved into the highway ahead and went scorching toward Trèves. To their great surprise, ten minutes later they beheld the kaiser coming out of the legation. "Quick, the pastry cook!" said Marie Adelaide. It took only five minutes, and yet—"There's the kaiser in front, eating plum tarts," whispered Sophie, staring at the well-known figure in the gray car. "What activity!"

"It's not possible!" said the grand duchess. And she told her minister of state that evening. "He cannot be everywhere."

"Will your highness have the explanation?" asked the genial Eyschen. "His imperial and royal majesty is at the front."

"?"

A humble citizen of Sirek, across the border, had a similar dilemma when he came on a business trip to Luxemburg. Returning to Sirek, he asserted in the cafes that the kaiser was not at the front, because he was here. They took him to the police.

"You are accused of spreading false news," said the commissary. "The kaiser is at the front. The proof is that the papers say so."

"But," insisted the Sireker, "I arrive from Luxemburg. I saw the kaiser this morning with my own eyes."

"It proves nothing," said the commissary. "?"

Three Kaisers!

"There are three kaisers in Luxemburg. How do you know which one you saw?"

And it was true.

"One real kaiser and two imitations," said the minister of state to Marie Adelaide. "Two officers, having the build and look of the kaiser, have received the order to 'make up' as his doubles. They wear the great blue cloak, falling low over the boots, the cap with garnet band, they wax their mustaches and black their brows to meet over the nose. They even reproduce his voice. Captain Weiss actually harangued the troops yesterday. And they circulate in great gray automobiles with the garnet stripe and black imperial eagle, constantly outwitting the curious. No spy or assassin can keep up with the kaiser. He is simultaneously in the faubourgs, on the road to Trèves, and at the flower market. In reality, he is working at the legation."

How Shall She Resist.

How shall a romantic girl resist such things? Few women resist the personality of the kaiser. Her subjects have criticized the grand duchess for inviting him to a second dinner after the state affair. But, remember, all her ladies of honor are Germans, and all her officers of the palace, except one, who is grand ducal. It is hard to stand against such influences.

Slender girl among great and terrible things!

The worst is that she is only 21, beautiful, unmarried and has five younger sisters to look after, each prettier than the other. Charlotte is aged 19, Hilda 18, Antoinette 16, Elizabeth 14 and Sophie 13.

"I shall not marry," says the grand duchess.

"We shall not marry," repeat Charlotte, Hilda, Antoinette, Elizabeth and Sophie.

Yes, but young things must marry. It is their nature. And whom shall they marry? It was often complicated. The Luxemburgers want their say about it. They dread the fate of their cousin, Queen Wilhelmina, for them.

They have no brothers. Their father is dead. And the law of 1907 rules the eventual succession of the female line in these six girls.

They are white doves among eagles.

Marie Adelaide defends her people with bill picks.

"You have stopped our telegraph and telephone service," she said to the kaiser. "My merchants are losing money. You have taken over our mail service. German soldiers replace my postmen."

The kaiser said he would see to it. A month later telephone subscribers were allowed to send local messages.

"You have seized our railroads," she continued. "My people may not ride without a dated permit, and 800,000 German soldiers have ridden free. The rolling stock is ruined. Yet you signed us a treaty never to use our railroads for military purposes."

The kaiser coughed.

"You have changed all the pretty names of our towns and villages. You have turned Lincieres into Junglinster, and Merise into Mersch. Mersch! La Rochette has become Fels, Rosiere is Roeser, and sweet Andelhem is Hosbert! Is it a military necessity? Do you seek only 'right of passage' as you promised? It has the odor of annexation. My people are worried."

The kaiser sniffed the air.

"What is that delicious perfume?" he inquired, to change the subject.

Marie Adelaide gave him a harder bill pick.

On the Kaiser.

"It is called 'Champs Elysees,'" she answered, handing him the bottle with the name on—latest triumph of the Guerlain house of Paris. The kaiser had no right to see an importation. Yet, at that moment, all Luxemburg was joking about "the landau of the Champs Elysees."

It was a magnificent open landau, which came to the little city empty. German soldiers escorting it said with awe: "It is the carriage in which our kaiser will enter Paris—down the Champs Elysees in triumph!" And they put it in the best garage.

Daily thereafter the bourgeois of Luxemburg made their afternoon walk past the garage. They wanted to see the landau of the Champs Elysees. But it remained in its shelter. So thereafter each time that there was a rumor of Paris being taken the Luxemburgers said: "Nenni, the landau is still there!"

No Great Riches.

Except for their rich mines, they are a peasant democracy. You can scarcely distinguish between classes. Grand old names are borne by poor people. "A Luxemburger is always active," runs the proverb. The same man may be a wine grower, tanner, miller and storekeeper. They are very honest, "real," they call it. Every family has its house and garden. The roof is tight, walls white, garden cultivated, and flowers in the windows. Like the Swiss, they "receive" much among themselves. Their "greichen" wine from the Luxemburg Moselle, harsh, thin and sweetish, "makes you shut one eye and can't open the other." It costs 5 cents the liter, and the Germans buy it to make champagne.

Such a people might seem tempted to make a good thing where Belgium made ruin. The comparison strikes anyone. And the grand duchess, with her army of 400 men, could only protest.

"The occupation of Luxemburg is contrary to the law of nations, and the protestation of the grand ducal government is justified," said Chancellor Bethmann in the reichstag on Aug. 4. "We shall repair the harm we cause as soon as our military end is attained."

When Germany paid an account of $100,000 for damages to houses destroyed, farms sacked, fields trenched and cemented, vehicles and stock requisitioned, etc., German papers represented the "good affair" which Luxemburg had made.

Marie Adelaide, Grand Duchess of Luxemburg—From a Photograph Taken Since the War. Her Costume Is of the Plainest—Almost That of a Nurse.

"Good affair?" repeated the grand duchess. "We have spent $250,000 in hospitals and Red Cross, caring for wounded Germans. Yet French wounded and prisoners, who ought to be interned the moment they touch our neutral soil, may not receive a cup of coffee from us at the railroad stations! Sire, this smells annexation!"

The kaiser scratched his nose (they say).

"And our mines and factories? You put out their proprietors and run them for yourselves. Will you reimburse? Will you pay damages? Do you keep account? When proprietors complain too much you arrest them. You have requisitioned all our food reserve, paying in paper money, at your own estimate. We have no horses left to till the ground, nor wheat to last till harvest. We shall come to bread tickets yet!"

The girl ruler's prediction has come true. Luxemburg is on bread tickets.

When the imprisoning habit grew Marie Adelaide wrote the kaiser.

"More than 100 Luxemburg lawyers, professors, land owners and proprietors have been sent to Prussian prisons," was the complaint. "Your majesty can imagine the feelings of my people when they see honored citizens led to the railroad station by a squad of Prussian soldiers. By international law no country gives up its own citizens, even criminals, to be judged in a foreign land."

And She Is Reproved.

Her subjects have criticized her for accepting what they call the Iron Cross from the hands of William II. It is incorrect. What she accepted was a kind of model reserved to the high dames of the Germanic Red Cross, a little jewel, not beautiful, of no importance.

As much say she is a woman.

And there is the marriage problem.

"I shall never marry," she says.

"We shall never marry," repeat Charlotte, Hilda, Antoinette, Elizabeth and Sophie.

Tut, tut.

And who is there to marry but a German prince?

So some say:

"Our grand duchess is a heroine."

And others:

"Our grand duchess is—grand duchess. The big and little highnesses have made it up together."

If You wanted to live
 Some important news to as many people as possible, would you go into a cornfield and tell the farmer and his helper and let it go at that? Or would you shout it out on the crowded streets to all who could hear?
 It's the same question in business. If you want to tell the people about how you can help them save money, tell it where the crowd will get hold of it. Put it in "the want ad paper," because that's where they look for your items.

THAT'S JUST COMMON SENSE. Phone your want ads to Main 500. Ask for Classified Ad Dept. Atlanta 5001.

EFFICIENCY in POLITICS

RICHARD G. CONOVER.

Call upon a man of business
During the hours of business.
Only on business.
Tennant your business.
Then go about your business.
So that he may have time
To attend to his business.
—Old Merchant's Admonition.

K EEN of gaze, apt of phrase, convincing in manner, Representative Murray Hulbert, of the Twenty-first New York district, says at his desk explaining to me how he happens to be just now the foremost political innovator of the United States. Through the pliancy of his spectacles flashed emphasizing glances as narrated the inception and progress in his present distinction. In a long line awaiting their turn to be received stood scores of the lawmaker's constituents. They were there, and I was there, because the unassuming Representative had opened a permanent office in his home district, where all the world might come and boldly buttonhole him. A gathering told me what you want headquarters—that's the innovation.

Business men have gone into politics and politicians have gone into business. That's nothing new. Politicians have made it their business to gain office and having annexed the office, have made it their business to pay no attention to the business of the office. Nothing new about that either. But Representative Hulbert has given a new twist to the science of practical officecraft.

"My idea of my job," the Representative is saying, "is that I have been employed by the electorate of my district to look after their legislative business for two years. Having hired me to do this work they have a right to know just how they can get best of me when they want me. Playing peek-a-bow with them is not looking after their affairs. Like the business manager of any business concern, I ought to have a stated place of business and be found there when necessary business is to be transacted. With this realization of my obligations and duties, I have caused over thirty thousand copies of the following letter to be mailed to the entire electorate of my district."

HOMES OF REPRESENTATIVE, U. S.
WASHINGTON, D. C.
APRIL 8, 1915.

My Dear Sir:—On March 4 the writer assumed the duties of the office of Representative in Congress from the Twenty-first New York district of New York.

In fulfillment of my anti-election pledge I have established an office for the transaction of official business at No. 47 West 125th street, New York, and will be there to serve you every Wednesday from three to six and eight to ten o'clock P. M. At the same time my secretary will be permanently employed in my Washington office.

Seeds and government literature are not placed at my disposal until the opening of the next session in December, unless a special session should be called. I have, however, procured a limited supply of seeds and miscellaneous publications which I shall be glad to distribute among those who apply for same.

On July 1 I am assigned a quota of Farmers' Bulletins, from which selections of the more than 10,000 which can be made according to the enclosed list.

In writing to me, you will specify your occupation, it will enable me to determine what publication or list may be issued from time to time are of interest to you.

Let me avail myself of this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation of the honor which has been conferred upon me, and to assure you that I shall strive to the best of my ability as your Representative. Sincerely yours, (Signed) MURRAY HULBERT.

While I read the letter Representative

Hulbert beckoned to the leader of the waiting line. He was an old soldier who wanted the Representative's aid in fixing up a pension application. Very thoroughly his data were tabulated. Down to the smallest detail Mr. Hulbert made note and with his own hand then came a man who pointed out how he could go to work at a place that was open after the Representative would be back him up. The banking was promised immediately. Next a motorist in uniform, seeking aid in obtaining a passport for a relative. The aid was assured. And then the widow of a man who had voted for the Representative. She was told that any help within the power of Mr. Hulbert was hers for a certainty. The line thinned at the rate of one every five minutes. Some went away pleased with a positive promise that had consumed only a minute of time in the asking and the giving.

"No, I don't believe there is an office just like this in the entire country," went on the Representative during the brief breathing spell. "I never heard of one before. But I made up my mind when I accepted the nomination that if I had the good fortune to be elected I'd apply the principle of business to my public service."

"I had often heard it charged that a Representative's job was principally confined to attendance during the session at Washington and the putting on of O. K. on applications for seeds and public documents. The Representative was not obliged to show himself to the people who elected him save at Fourth of July orations and during campaigns for re-election. The rest of the public service was rendered through his secretary. It would be against time honored prerogative for a Representative to be found by a voter when wanted."

Now, politicians have opened offices before now, and new office holders have used them before this day the letter to launch their popularizing schemes and more effectively rally their backers and supporters about them. So in between Mr. Hulbert's talk I began to wonder if the "boss" or the "leader" would appear. Now and then a man would arrive who looked as if he might have been such. And when he came through the door I'd stop, look and listen. But no, it was another constituent with an appeal.

"Will you hatch up any campaign schemes here?" I queried with a conciliatory smile to dull the brusque edge of the question.

"Have your constituents proved the value of your innovation, Representative?"

"Indeed they have. I opened this office the last Wednesday in March and there has been a constant stream. Two and three hundred callers of an afternoon and evening shows how they appreciate the opportunity of meeting the man they have elected and to whom they look for such services as a public official should always be on hand to give. But in a way, up to now, I'm a sort of political anomaly."

"Because of opening an office to show you are in office?"

"No, but because while I am being paid for serving as a Representative since March 4, nevertheless in some things I am not yet a Representative. I have not yet served in a Congressional session and I am not yet entitled to the franking privileges on literature and seeds which Representatives are asked so constantly to send out."

"Seeds to send out?" I ejaculated, in surprise. "Seeds! What do you care about seeds in the Twenty-first New York district? Nobody wants seeds in a crowded city."

"No?" answered the Representative, faintly sarcastic. "Well, make up your mind that there's all sorts of seed sent out to residents of even congested New York. You'd be surprised. Some of the people in my district have little places in the country and others have relatives in the country. They want seeds, and they want lots of them. They want to plant vegetables and they want to plant flowers. They apply for them and they are entitled to them."

"Not having the right to frank seeds I've resorted to all sorts of expedients to meet the requests of constituents. I've had seeds from other Representatives. I've bought some. I've had them sent one way or another, although I have not yet obtained the privilege of regularly procuring them and sending them out on my own responsibility and initiative. This will come later. In the meantime I consider it my business to furnish seeds and public documents and literature to those of my district who apply for them. So I'm trying to attend to this business."

"The way that Representatives take and leave office with respect to the opening and closing of Congress makes rather a mix up of matters. A new Representative must feel his responsibilities for months before he has had a chance to take part in the deliberations of the House of Representatives. He's a member of it, but from spring until winter he's a sort of legislative outcast. There's nothing to do in a deliberative way because there's no session. It's generally considered a compulsory loaf. But I've opened this office as a sort of innovation to indicate to the people of my district that I am ready to serve them in all other capacities proper for me apart from that of law making."

"After my election I made up my mind that I would go down to Washington and sit through a good part of the session as an interested spectator. So down I went and was there on and off for two or three months during the winter. I think it was of great benefit to me and will make me a better legislator for my district. I kept tab on what was needed for my district and have a good working knowledge of just what was done and what failed of being done affecting the interests of my electorate. This I did, of course, of my own volition, as the district was represented during the session by my predecessor. But it was well worth the expense and the trouble."

"Do you think your office innovation will have a tendency to force a vote of this sort?"

"Maybe so, but whether it does or not I intend to keep it going. It's the best way to show you feel the responsibilities of your job during the months that Congress is not in session. Why, do you know that men have made trips to Washington to find their Representative only to discover he wasn't there. Back home they went and hunted in vain for him there. Finally they have had to give up looking and repent an expenditure of money, time and temper they could all afford. Had there been a place where the constituent could have put his hand on his Representative whenever he wished to do so the individual and collective affairs of the district would have received far better attention and the political map would have been traced altogether differently many times, perhaps, as a consequence."

A new line of constituents had been forming. Representative Hulbert cast a rapid glance over them and remarked: "There are just thirteen of them. I must attend to them in 55 o'clock."

"Why the unusual haste for just thirteen?" I asked when he had expeditiously disposed of this batch, giving, however, courtesy and comfort to every applicant. "Are you a believer in the psychic significance of the number?"

Mr. Hulbert nodded his head in sage seriousness. "I could hardly credit a national lawmaker with attaching so much importance to a superstition, and I suspected and suspected a joke-trick. But the Representative looked at me solemnly through his gleaming eyeglasses and backed up his belief thus:—

"Without a doubt there's something to that thirteen. I've noticed many things portentous to me mixed up with that number. I am recorded in Rochester, N. Y., as having been born there May 14, 1881. But my father said it was May 13. There are thirteen letters in the name of Murray Hulbert. Thomas Jefferson was born on April 13 and I delivered an address at his birthday celebration a few days ago. My name was the thirteenth on the ballot when I was elected. I live in Apartment 13 of my house, No. 100 West 140th street. The number 67 West 125th street, where this office is located, has a dash of it, for six and seven of course make thirteen. Oh, yes, thirteen strikes me as meaning quite a good deal to me."

"You understand that the opening of this office was in fulfillment of a promise I made in the campaign. For although I made the promise on the stump and in the utmost seriousness as the pledge of a truthful man, the promise was doubted. I know it was doubted, because since I opened the office there have been at least a score of voters who have visited me for the sole purpose of beholding the office and the man who kept a campaign pledge. That's all they desired—just a look at an unassuming Congressman in the act of the utmost seriousness as the pledge of a truthful man, the promise was doubted. I know it was doubted, because since I opened the office there have been at least a score of voters who have visited me for the sole purpose of beholding the office and the man who kept a campaign pledge. CHICAGO LIST SAGS WITH ITALIAN MOVE

Crop Damage Reports Help Grain Market in the Early Session, But Prices Crumble by the Close.

Chicago, May 22.—Action by King Edward Emmanuel, which seemed to imply that Italy regarded herself as already at war with the United States today, notwithstanding an early and official disavowal, caused a decline in the market.

There was an unsettled close 1/4 to 1 1/2, with the market generally in a decline.

Corn finished 1/4 to 1/2 down; oats 1/2 down; clover 1/2 down; timothy 1/2 down; alfalfa 1/2 down; and hay 1/2 down.

Wheat advanced and then receded in company with wheat.

Flour advanced 1/2 to 1/4 firmer than yesterday.

Provisions lacked buyers support. Lower prices for hogs made slaughter.

Following are quotations for the week ending Saturday:

Correl.

New York, May 25.—The market for coffee futures was quiet today, but after opening unchanged to a point higher prices advanced quite sharply on a little European buying. The market closed at 14 cents for the small interior Santos and 15 cents for the large Santos. The market also observed to check offerings and inspired a little advance of 16 to 17 cents. Santos No. 4, Santos No. 5 and Santos No. 6 were unchanged.

Milreis prices were unchanged and the rate of Rio exchange was 100 milreis for the dollar. Receipts at the two Brazilian ports, 26,000 bags, January receipts, 1,000, and 1,000, respectively.

Futures ranged in New York Saturday:

November		$2.69.64

Dry Goods.

New York, May 22.—Primary cotton goods markets are recovering from the dullness following the recent decline in prices. There is an increasing willingness to buy some of the goods at prices below the top prices, and the market is firm. Settlement in the markets has been aided by statistical confirmation of the expanding export trade in textiles. The demand for broad and shawl drills for export continues to grow. There is a steady and broadening demand for many of the goods in the primary goods in quantities not at war. Forward orders in quantities, either printed or colored is held back for a time. The market is becoming more potent every week in the demand for goods in the primary goods. The market has held very steady despite the dullness in unfinished cloths. The shapers are doing steadily better. The market is holding steady and other reasonable station. While the market is holding steady, the freight rates are supplying immediate requirements.

tion are selling firmer and showing a rising tendency. Southern staple gingham has been sold at a lower price, and every colored goods are very firm. Prices noted are as follows:

STATUARY IN COLORS, done by MODERN ITALIANS IN ANCIENT GREEK STYLE. AT THE GREAT PANAMA PACIFIC EXPOSITION

The Pompeian Girl. This life-size figure of a girl of the ancient city on her way to the fountain with her water jar is an excellent example of delicate work on the part of the sculptor. The modeling is exquisite, the draperies handled with remarkable skill.

The Algerian Girl. This figure, three-quarter size in height, is done in bronze and marble. The girl herself is in white Carrara, the vase in yellow marble and stone, the dark draperies in bronze. This is one of those lifelike figures which seems to be that of a real girl, rather than a statue.

Cleopatra, by Antonio Frolli of Florence. This striking figure, done life size, is executed in white Carrara marble, with the draperies and the bit of Egyptian wall which forms the background carried out in colored marble. This statue shows the most delicate work and understanding on the part of the sculptor. It is of the highest type of decorative art. It is not intended to tell a story, it is intended simply to be a thing lovely in itself.

Maternal Love. In expressing here the spirit of maternity the sculptor has done more than merely to carve a decorative figure. This is one of the most beautiful pieces in this group of statues. The modeling of mother and child is well nigh perfect and the expressions are real. The piece is more modern in type than the Pompeian girl.

The Merry Widow. This bust is of the most modern type of Italian art. It is a figure of the most difficult execution. The veil is all cut in marble of such delicate sculpture that the effect is that of a real veil. The drapery over the shoulders is of bronze. This figure is interesting for its execution rather than as a work of art.

SOME exquisite sculptures, remarkable not only for their execution, but for the decorative effect produced by the use of colored marble and bronze in contrast with white Carrara marble, are displayed in the Italian Pavilion and the other exhibits of Italy at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco.

The ancient Greeks painted their statues in natural colors. What effect they produced we can only guess, as the color has long since disappeared from the Greek sculpture remaining to us, and as we do not know how skillful they were in employing it. But this modern Italian art may give us at least some idea of how statuary in colors may be made to appear.

This work is not painted in the Greek fashion but obtains its color from the natural hues of the different marbles employed, and from bronze, both of which are used in conjunction with the white Carrara marble in which the sculpture is executed.

These are examples of the finest type of decorative art as contrasted with the monumental type of sculpture. They have remarkable freedom of pose and fairly seem to live. In fact, from the photographs, it seems difficult to believe that these are carved statues and not merely posed human beings.

This is all modern work by contemporary sculptors. Some of it does bear the impress of the Early Roman, but other pieces, for example, the Merry Widow, are thoroughly in the current note. These statues were a part of the wondrous freight of art brought over from Europe on the Jason.
